OIL SUPPLY IN SIGHT FOR ONLY SIX YEARS SAYS COOLIDGE BOARD

CALLS FOR CONSERVATION

SUGGESTS SOUTHERN FIELDS

Private Control Rather Than Government Regulation of the Industry Favored.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 5.—Serious concern over the future oil supply of the United States, both for military and industrial purposes, is shown in the report by the Federal Oil Conservation Board, dealing with national petroleum conditions, which was made public today by Secretary Work, who announced that the report had been sent to President Coolidge in the Adirondacks.

The total present reserves in pumping and flowing wells in the proven sands, according to the report, has been estimated at about 4,500,000,000 barrels. This is theoretically only six years' supply, the board emphasizes, although it cannot be extracted from the ground that quickly.

Since the first oil well was drilled in Pennsylvania more than 68,000 oil wells have been drilled in the United States, more than a fifth of which were failures, and to June 30 last over 9,000,000,000 barrels of crude oil had been produced. But 3,000,000,000 barrels, or one-third of this great total, has been produced in less than five years, and the production last year alone exceeded 750,000,000 barrels.

The United States is producing and consuming 70 per cent. of the world's oil production, and the total investment in the business today is given as $9,500,000,000, while for the last year for which figures are available the total wholesale value of the products was $1,793,700,027.

Conservation Declared Imperative.

In what it considers a concise picture of true conditions, as determined by the exhaustive inquiry in which it has been engaged more than a year, the board, consisting of Secretaries Work, Hoover, Wilbur and Davis, asserts that with the current production coming from about 4 per cent. of the producing wells, most of them only a year or so old, and from fields discovered in the past five years, the future maintenance of current supplies implies constant discovery of new fields and new wells. The board holds that the situation renders it imperative for the welfare of the nation that every effort be exerted to obtain the maximum amount of oil from known fields and the most vigorous efforts at conservation along various lines.

Future supplies, the board holds, must depend on reserves, new fields, improved methods of recovery, better utilization of control, consumption economies, supplies from distillation of shale and coal, and even from foreign oil fields. The board urges better control of production, better mechanical devices for use of oil products, and that American oil companies should acquire and exploit foreign fields.

"While the production of oil upon our own territory is obviously of first importance," the report says, "yet in failure of adequate supplies the imports of oil are of vast moment. The present imports from Latin-American fields amount to about 62,000,000 barrels annually of crude oil, against which we export about 94,000,000 barrels of products.

Points to Southern Fields.

"The fields of Mexico and South America are of large yield and much promising geologic oil structure is as yet undrilled. That our companies should vigorously acquire and explore such fields is of first importance not only as a source of future supply but supply under control of our own citizens.

"Our experience with the exploitation of our consumers by foreign-controlled sources of rubber, nitrate, potash and other raw materials should be sufficient warning as to what we may expect if we shall become dependent upon foreign nations for our oil supplies. Moreover, an increased number of oil sources tends to stabilize price and minimize the effect of fluctuating production."

The provision of future supplies of essential oil products for the American people, the board asserts, must arise from the following sources:

1. The reserves already mentioned.
2. The possible discovery of new sands in the known areas by deeper drilling.
3. The possible discovery of new fields.
4. Improved methods which will recover a larger proportion of the oil out of the sands.
5. Better utilization of crude oils by diversion from less essential to more essential uses, such as conversion of fuel oil into gasoline.
6. Better control of the flush flow from newly discovered fields.
7. Economies in consumption by improved mechanical devices.
8. Supplies from distillation of oil shales and coal.
9. Foreign oil fields.

The board says the major part of the measures to be taken to protect our future supplies "must rest upon the normal commercial initiative of private enterprise." The field for Government action is declared to be "considerable, but to formulate the broader by-laws of the industry in the sense of conservation and to concentrate thought

Coolidge Camp Sets Record In Volume of News Sent

PAUL SMITH'S, N. Y., Sept. 5.—The greatest news volume record for any President's vacation has been attained in the sixty-two days of President Coolidge's stay here. Special dispatches sent to the newspapers totaled 1,209,739 words, while the press associations sent about one-third that amount.

The country has been able to receive the instant report of the President's doings in this far-away point because the telegraph companies established special facilities here and had five operators to transmit the dispatches.

Frank McNamara was at the head of the Western Union Telegraph Company's press office, and Joseph Siegel had charge of the Postal service. Twenty-four-hour service was maintained.

REPUBLICAN CHIEFS ARE GATHERING HERE

TO CONFER UPON PLATFORM

Some in Party Hope for Hylan Fight on Smith—Hear Raids by McLaughlin Anger Tammany.

United States Senator James W. Wadsworth Jr., whose renomination at the Republican State Convention is considered certain, will open his New York City headquarters at the Hotel Belmont tomorrow. His presence in the city is expected to start a series of informal conferences with local party leaders.

Senator Wadsworth will speak this afternoon at the Labor Day celebration at Fort Hamilton, but as many of the local Republicans will be out of the city, his political conversations are not expected to begin until tomorrow. National Committeeman Charles D. Hilles and Representative Ogden L. Mills, who have been out of the city for some time, will be back then, as will Samuel S. Koenig, Chairman of the New York County Republican Committee. Jacob A. Livingston, Brooklyn Republican leader; Charles C. Lockwood, Chairman of the Kings County Republican Committee; F. J. H. Kracke and former Senator William M. Calder were said to be among the other local Republicans who would probably take the opportunity of Senator Wadsworth's presence to discuss the situation with him.

To Discuss Platform.

The discussions, it was said, would probably be more about the platform than of candidates for Governor, although there will, of course, be some talk of candidates. Republican leaders here are practically unanimous in opposing any State prohibition enforcement plank, and will assure Senator Wadsworth that he has their support in the position he has taken against it.

To offset the expected loss of Republican votes for him up-State because of the independent dry candidacy of Franklin W. Cristman, a special effort will be made to get a large vote for Senator Wadsworth in New York City. The local campaign headquarters is being established for this purpose. William W. Hoppin is Chairman of the local Wadsworth committee, which will conduct an almost separate campaign for Senator Wadsworth here. Associated with Mr. Hoppin will be Charles H. Tuttle, Chairman of the Advisory Committee of the New York County Republican Committee, and former Representative James A. Francis of Larchmont.

The work of the Hoppin committee will include the arrangement of speaking dates for Senator Wadsworth, the compilation of campaign material and the formulation of plans for carrying the Wadsworth candidacy to victory on election day. Local clubs for Senator Wadsworth will be formed, and it is planned to hold many rallies for him and his running mates on the Republican State ticket.

Business Men to Help.

The Republican Business Men, Inc., will cooperate with the committee in all plans for bringing out a heavy Republican vote below the Bronx. Mr. Hoppin predicted that Senator Wadsworth would sweep New York City and that the entire Republican State ticket would be elected. The Wadsworth supporters are counting strongly on the Senator's opposition to prohibition to bring him a heavy vote here.

Republican leaders here, who are still in search for a candidate for Governor, professed to feel great encouragement in the recent attacks

COOLIDGE WON'T ASK CONGRESS TO MAKE TRUST LAW CHANGES

He Regards Present Statutes as Satisfactory, and He Wants Business Let Alone.

FAVORS FARM LOAN FUND

President's Message Expected to Recommend Rail Consolidation Legislation.

AGAINST TARIFF REVISION

Will Propose Law Establishing Board to Adust Disputes in Coal Industry.

Special to The New York Times.

PAUL SMITH'S, N. Y., Sept. 5.—In defining his policy toward business relations in his coming message to Congress, President Coolidge will not recommend new legislation that might disturb business. The message will accept present laws as satisfactory and protective of public interests, and therefore as offering no field for revision to meet conditions that have arisen in big business enterprises.

The only important consideration before the President in this line is the proposal by William Donovan, Assistant Attorney General in charge of anti-trust cases, that the Clayton and Sherman Anti-Trust laws be amended to take care of a new phase of monopolies which concern control of physical properties rather than stock control, such as appeared in the "bread and food trust cases."

Mr. Coolidge has had this matter brought to his attention, and it is asserted by those associated with him that he has decided that the anti-trust laws are fully protective of the public, as shown by the success of the Department of Justice in getting decrees dissolving alleged monopolies before they actually came into legal existence. This is true in the two cases cited by some Department of Justice officials in their arguments for strengthening the anti-trust laws.

Thinks Revision Unnecessary.

Personally, the President has concluded that the laws do not need revision, although he desires to confer with Attorney General Sargent, who is coming here this week, before making a final decision. Mr. Sargent has not been convinced by his associates that anti-trust laws should be amended and it is thought that Mr. Coolidge's personal view will be upheld by the Attorney General. Hence, it is accepted by officials here that no anti-trust legislation will be recommended by the Administration to the next Congress.

In the last few months President Coolidge has found big business proceeding along fair, economic lines and within the law. He does not desire to introduce into this situation any discussion for a tightening of the business laws, knowing that such a proposal might lead to a cessation of present activities and a depression that would not be for the good of the country.

While holding that business ought to be allowed to go ahead on broad lines, the President feels that it is the duty of the Government to exert its influence wherever necessary to protect the investing public. He is in entire agreement with Professor Ripley's declaration that investors should be furnished with accurate and adequate information as to companies offering their stocks to the public. While he has stated that such reports could be more easily obtained through action of the States chartering the corporation, he understands that the action might be slow and would not be uniform.

It is said Mr. Coolidge will recommend to Congress, if it is found necessary, legislation clothing the Federal Trade Commission with authority to get such reports from companies doing interstate business. This may not be necessary if the United States Supreme Court upholds the present law providing that the commission may require reports in the form prescribed by it.

Annoyed by Federal Trade Board.

he course of the Federal Trade Commission in making investigations of business concerns on the slightest complaint has annoyed the Administration, which has contended that many of the inquiries have had a political tinge. The Administration desires to see the commission aid business, keep it within the law and protect the investing public. When the personnel of the commission is

Special to The New York Times.

ALEXANDRIA BAY, N. Y., Sept. 5.—Mayor James J. Walker of New York City, who is the week-end guest of former Commodore J. Norris Oliphant, was the guest of honor at a dinner party at the Thousand Island Country Club last night with Mr. Oliphant as the host.

Mr. and Mrs. James H. Hammond of Pittsburgh entertained the Mayor at a luncheon party at The Lodges today.

Mayor Walker, H. D. Cornwall and J. Norris Oliphant tried their luck at angling for black bass this morning and brought home some large ones. The Mayor caught a three and one-half pounder.

SLAYS TO AVENGE MURDER OF HER SON

Woman Shoots Man She Had Hunted Six Years as She Meets Him in Street.

HURLS UMBRELLA AT HIM

A vendetta relentlessly pursued by an Italian mother for six years ended yesterday afternoon when she shot and killed the man she believed responsible for the fatal shooting of her only son.

As Andrew Ficcarelli, the victim, approached the corner of Delancey and Goerck Streets, a few doors from the spot where he is said to have killed the young man, Mrs. Josephine Cagnina, mother of the slain youth, hurried up behind him. She gripped the collar of his coat and whipped a pistol from her dress. Before he could turn, she fired a shot through his neck. Four more bullets followed. One struck him in the head, the others going wild.

The woman threw her pistol aside as Ficcarelli fell. Bending her umbrella over her knee, she hurled it at the dying man's face in a final gesture of fury. Patrolman John O'Donnell ran up and arrested her. At first she denied all knowledge of the shooting. Confronted with a seven-year-old boy who witnessed it, she admitted her guilt.

The boy, Chrystie Lorenzo of 324 Cherry Street, was taken to the police station, where he told of the shooting. The boy said Mrs. Cagnina threw the pistol on the ground and an unidentified man picked it up and disappeared in a hallway following the shooting.

Tells Crowd Why She Did It.

She told the gathering crowd that the man had killed her 23-year old son in April, 1920, in front of his home at 56 Goerck Street. Ficcarelli was taken to Gouverneur Hospital by Dr. Horowitz, but died on the way.

Mrs. Cagnina waved good-bye to the crowd as she was taken to the Clinton Street station. There she became hysterical, saying over and over again that she had killed Ficcarelli to avenge the death of her son. When the police questioning lapsed she sobbed her son's name softly to herself, as if the only impression the crime made on her was to recall his memory.

"Every one in the neighborhood knows that man shot my son," she said. "He was my only son and a very good boy to me."

Hysterically she spoke in broken English. It was necessary for Detective Henry Schneider of the Clinton Street Station and detectives of the Homicide Bureau to cease their querries and permit the overwrought woman somewhat to regain her self-control.

Detectives learned that the pistol she used had been sent to her from Italy. She gave her occupation as a coat finisher in a tailoring shop.

Mrs. Cagnani first said she was a widow and afterward told the police that she was separated from her husband. She had left him, she declared, because he would not avenge the death of her son.

Met Victim by Accident.

Later, when she was questioned by Assistant District Attorney Joseph Pascocalla, Mrs. Cagnina said she had left the apartment she occupied with her daughter, Rosa Rasbo, at 1 Corlears Street, to do some shopping. At Delancey and Goerck Streets she saw Ficcarelli standing in front of a store. She then hurried back to the apartment to get the pistol. When she returned the man was still there. She approached him and fired point blank, according to her story.

The killing of her son, she declared, occurred in an altercation with Ficcarelli when her boy resented an alleged slur regarding her.

She was charged with homicide and will have a hearing in Essex Market Court this morning.

Ficcarelli was 40 years old and the only address the police could get for him was Lorimer Street, Brooklyn. He was said to have been married.

According to Bertillon prints and police records, Ficcarelli was arrested on Jan. 6, 1913, on a charge of counterfeiting and was sentenced five days later in Federal court to a two-year term in the Atlanta penitentiary.

Three years later, under the name of James Lombardi, the same man was arrested here for petit larceny. The last entry in the case is dated October, 1918, but no final disposition is recorded. Although a "wanted" card had been issued for Ficcarelli in connection with the death of young Cagnina, according to the police, he was never arrested on this charge.

20 DEAD, 50 INJURED AS COLORADO TRAIN PLUNGES INTO RIVER

COACHES PILE UP IN WATER

Various Causes Are Reported, Including Boulder on Curve and Broken Rail.

RESCUERS RUSH TO SCENE

Two Brides Are Among Those Losing Lives in Disaster on the Arkansas River.

Special to The New York Times.

LEADVILLE, Col., Sept. 5.—Plunging into the Arkansas River at Waco, Col., fifteen miles south of here, at noon today, the engine and six coaches of the famous Scenic Limited of the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad piled up in the water of the stream with a toll of twenty known dead, fifty injured and twelve still missing at a late hour tonight. Several of the remaining coaches of the fourteen-car train left the track but did not overturn.

The cause of the disaster is not definitely known. No official statement has been issued. One report is that a broken rail or a spread rail was responsible. Another stated that a boulder had rolled onto the track and that the locomotive left the track when it struck this. A third report was that the train was an hour late and making up time and was traveling at too great a speed to negotiate the curve where the wreck occurred.

THE DEAD.

ALLISON, —, 22, Avon, Col.
DOBLER, Clarence E., Kearney, Nebr.
EVERETTT, ALBERT, Leadville.
HARPENDING, HAROLD, engineer, Salida.
HOLT, Mrs. JOHN, Elmont, Kan.
ISABELLE, Mrs. DENNIS, Canon City.
ISABELLE, RUTH, 16, Canon City.
ISABELLE, JUDS, 7, Canon City.
LANE, Mrs. MARTIN, Leadville.
LOCKMAN, Mrs. Corona, 303 Lee Street, Clarksburg, W. Va.
METJOYICK, Mrs. Rosalie, Leadville.
PERSCHBACKER, Mrs. Olive, 17, Buena Vista.
RATHBURNE, Mrs. Harold C., Buena Vista.
WOODWORTH, —, address unknown.
Two unidentified boys.

According to reports received here, the engine and tender nosed into the river, followed by the two baggage cars, which piled on top of each other. The first passenger coach leaped across the river in such a way that the forward end rested on the opposite bank while the rear end hung on to the railroad roadbed in such a way as to form a bridge across the stream. The next two cars nosed into the river while the third turned completely over and lay flat on its back on the river bed.

At the spot where the wreck occurred, the river is fifty feet wide, with the bank rising to a height of ten or twelve feet on either side. The water is less than two feet deep so that none of the passengers was drowned.

Two Brides Among the Victims.

One of the most tragic features of the disaster was the killing of two brides, traveling companions, who were occupants of one of the day coaches. Mrs. Dorothy Rathburne, a high school teacher of Buena Vista, Col., a bride of six months, was dead when she was taken from the wreckage, her head being crushed in.

One leg of Mrs. Ollie Perschbacker, aged 18, a bride of two weeks, was cut off and the other so badly mangled as to make amputation necessary. The shock of the operation, which was performed on the spot, caused her death.

The two young women were on the

MARTIAL LAW IS PROCLAIMED IN SPAIN AS ARTILLERY CORPS AND CADETS REBEL; GOVERNMENT REPORTS MUTINY SUPPRESSED

All Artillery Chiefs and Officers Arrested And Confined to Quarters, Government Reports

MADRID, Sept. 5 (A. P.).—The Government late tonight issued an official statement declaring that the mutinous movement of the Spanish artillerymen had been completely suppressed.

The statement reads:

The King and the Cabinet have reiterated their confidence in General Primo de Rivera. Messages of loyalty have been received from all branches of the army. The artillery barracks have been occupied and are being guarded by other troops, as ordered by the Government.

Reports from all parts of Spain say that perfect order prevails.

The Government can be congratulated on the manner in which it has handled the situation without the shedding of blood.

The leaders of the movement will be punished. All artillery officers and commanders have been arrested and confined to their quarters.

M'LAUGHLIN PLUNGES INTO SEA FOR RESCUE

REASSURES FOUR ABOARD

Swims Home After Launch Is in Tow—Fights Cold Waters Long Distance at 11 P.M.

Police Commissioner George V. McLaughlin plunged into the dark and cold ocean at Sea Gate shortly before 11 o'clock last night and swam out some distance to aid four young men in a motorboat whose engine had gone dead and who were shouting for help. The Commissioner waited until a police launch, for which he had telephoned before starting to the rescue himself, arrived and took the disabled boat in tow, and then swam back home.

A desire to take a weather observation before retiring had brought the Commissioner to the front porch of his Summer home at Sea Gate, which is not far from that of Governor Smith. The ocean at that point is usually rough and there are a number of rock-built jetties projecting into it which make the waterfront particularly dangerous for small boats on stormy nights. That strip of water has gained the name of the "potato patch."

Phones for Launch, Dives In.

As the Commissioner gazed out over it he heard cries for help, and straining his eyes made out that a small boat offshore seemed to be in distress and that the shouts were coming from one or more of the occupants. Mr. McLaughlin quickly telephoned to the Marine Division of the Police Department and also notified the Coney Island Police Station.

When he again went back to his front porch after telephoning the Commissioner found that the cries had increased in intensity and was afraid that the occupants of the boat were in great danger. He quickly donned a bathing suit and plunged into the cold and dark water.

How far he had to swim is uncertain, but after a few minutes he reached the boat from which the shouts had come and found that it was a small motorboat with the engine stalled. The Commissioner pulled himself abroad and reassured the four young men he found there by telling them that police aid was already on the way.

The Marine Division had already flashed word to Police Launch No. 2, which was watching for rum runners in the Narrows with Sergeants William Randolph, Patrolmen Joe Cody and Daniel Noble aboard her. The launch immediately started to the rescue of the men.

Although heartened by the Commissioner's presesnce and his words, the occupants of the boat were tired, wet and frightened. They were afraid of being overturned or dashed against the jetties. The lights of the police launch,

CHURCH AID TO LABOR GROWING, SAYS GREEN

At Carnegie Hall He Calls the English Clergy's Activity in Coal Strike Significant.

PLEDGES WAR ON FASCISM

Brands Mussolini Rule Peril to All Society in Address at Rand School.

President William Green of the American Federation of Labor vigorously arraigned anti-union employers in an address at the Labor Sunday services at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon, in which he dealt in the main with the improved relations between labor and the churches.

Mr. Green referred bitterly to non-union coal mining companies in West Virginia and Kentucky, which, he said, had established a "feudalism" to prevent their miners from forming unions and to keep them out of reach of union organizers who, in turn, were even denied admittance to their towns. He told of "companies which still employ spies and thugs" to nip in the bud any ambitions among the working forces to organize themselves. He marveled that such conditions still prevailed in a "free America" and in the face of an open sentiment, particularly expressed by churches, that labor should be free to organize for purposes of collective bargaining.

In another speech made yesterday before the convention of the Anti-Fascist Alliance of North America, at the Rand School, 7 East Fifteenth Street, Mr. Green told that organization, "that the A. F. of L. will stand with you and work with you until we have succeeded in driving Fascism from the face of the earth." He received a hearty ovation.

Mr. Green said in his speech at Carnegie Hall that labor was not "all virtue and no faults" and that it took "workers as we find them" and tried to blend them as well as possible into the general movement. He remarked that some recruits could not easily forget old-time blacklists, and sometimes cherished desire for revenge upon employers who had penalized them. He said it then became the work of the organized labor movement to "shape his thought along constructive lines."

Finds Force a Thing of the Past.

"But the rule of reason prevails," said Mr. Green. "Force is a thing of the past and only to be used as a last resort."

Nevertheless, Mr. Green said, the labor movement would not rest until it had secured for workers a scale of wages commensurate with the American standard of living.

"We have fought, and we will continue to fight," he said. "We will be constructive when the opportunity to be constructive is offered."

Mr. Green cited the active participation of Church of England bishops and clergy in the British miners' strike, and noted that this departure from long standing custom there indicated a growing understanding between the churches and labor.

"This should not be surprising," said Mr. Green, "when we consider how industry has so vitally touched the lives of such a large part of the world's population. There are so many human beings so directly associated with industry, and there are so many things in the world dependent upon industry that it seems the problems of industry become the problems of the church."

Praise for the Churches.

Mr. Green expressed deep appreciation of the sympathy with labor which had been given by Pope Leo XIII in his encyclical letter on the condition of labor, and also by the Federal Council of Churches and the National Catholic War Council.

As evidence of the "applied religion" practiced by unions themselves, Mr. Green referred to its controlling influence in obtaining passage of the workmen's compensation laws, and to its relief work among its own members.

"It might be interesting to know," he said, "the total amount of money voluntarily contributed by wage earners annually to their unfortunate fellow-workers and the widows and orphans of their members. Our records show that the trade unions paid more than twenty million dollars during the year 1925 to their members in death, sick and miscellaneous benefits. All of these contributions came direct from the earnings of the workers. Added to MADRID, Sept. 5.—In consequence of the internal situation martial law has been decreed throughout Spain.

In a long official note issued to the press it is explained that the reason for the declaration of martial law is the necessity to take strong measures against officers of the Artillery School.

Since the signing of the royal decree of June 6 modifying the ordinance of promotion in wartime and suppressing the article permitting resignations, "a series of acts of resistance amounting to absolute indiscipline," says the official note, has been left unpunished by the Minister of War. But today the Government learned that the Chief of the Artillery Corps had ordered officers on leave to rejoin their regiments on his own initiative. The officer in command of the Segovia Regiment had also confined his troops to barracks without authorization "in case other regiments sent from Madrid should attack them." The arrest of these two officers was ordered.

Two Garrisons in Revolt.

At an early hour last night the Captain General of Valladolid and the Civil Governor of Segovia reported that the garrisons were in "a complete state of indiscipline" and even that the Military Academy cadets had been "stupidly involved" in the matter. In consequence of all this the Government had asked the King to come to Madrid immediately and authorize a declaration of martial law throughout Spain and her adjacent islands.

The King signed royal decrees suspending employment and pay of all officers of the Artillery Corps, prohibiting them from the use of their uniforms and entry into their barracks or offices, and exempting all the rest of the army from obeying them. The note says the gravity of these measures accords with the gravity of the offense. The officers of the Artillery School "have put loyalty to their corps before their military duty and love of country."

The trouble, deep, old and long permitted, was the origin of other troubles which until a few years ago were lamented by the whole country and made its life difficult. Circumstances now obliged the Government to combat this trouble. To hesitate would be "to fertilize fatal rebellions." The rest of the army will surely assist the Government, but it will be chiefly assisted by the idea that it is exactly doing its duty and by the irresistible support of public opinion.

Royal decrees have been published authorizing action by the Government. All officers resisting the measures taken against them will be considered rebels and very summarily judged. Those who directly or indirectly help them, or ostensibly or by making excuses deny the Government the necessary means of conquering opposition, will be guilty of the same offense and be treated equally summarily.

The Government issued a note late this evening, stating that the King on his arrival in Madrid sent for General Primo de Rivera and reiterated his confidence in the Government. A Cabinet Council was held later in the day.

Many Offers of Help Received.

From an early hour, says an official statement, the Government received adhesions and offers of help from corporations and private citizens, many of them being military men. The attitude of all non-artillery ranks and of artillery reserve officers has been one of perfect discipline, all being disposed to do their duty.

The First Regiment of Light Artillery, garrisoned in the docks, were required at midday by the head of staff, who was accompanied by picket of Infantry, to give up their command, which they did at once. During the rest of the day similar operations were performed in the Tenth and Twelfth Regiments. Members of the Artillery School for Instruction were arrested in their own houses, as well as high officers belonging to these corps.

During the whole day the Minister of War kept in telephone communication with the Captain Generals, who maintained perfect discipline on the part of corps other than the artillery, and there was a succession of surrenders in various garrisons. It is possible to consider the problem is completely resolved so far as the garrisons of Anda-

Reckless Swimmer Rescued, Then Arrested For Violating 'the Dictum of Common Sense'

Special to The New York Times.

LAVALETTE, N. J., Sept. 5.—Albert Roesch, a 23-year-old college graduate of Jenkintown, Pa., was arrested on the beach this morning just after life guards had rescued him from drowning in the heavy surf. The arrest was made by Mayor Enoch Van Camp, who upbraided the man for recklessness in swimming beyond the life lines.

Roesch went far out into the water to avoid the crashing breakers and then found he could not get back. His cries were heard by persons on the beach. By the time life guards had pushed out into the surf to save him virtually the entire population of the little village was watching the rescue.

The exhausted swimmer was brought to shore and revived. Then, to everybody's astonishment, Mayor Van Camp strode up to him and placed him under arrest.

When asked under what law the arrest had been made, the Mayor replied:

"I don't know whether there has been any law violated or not. We'll find that out tomorrow. I arrested him for violating the dictum of common sense and for endangering the lives of the men who had to go out to save him."

Roesch was too unnerved by his struggle to answer. He will be taken to court tomorrow morning.

Twin Girls Swim From Yonkers to Battery; Only 12 Years Old; Hope to Conquer Channel

Two 12-year-old girls, sisters, greased as are Channel swimmers, dived into the Hudson at Yonkers shortly before 10 o'clock yesterday morning, and six and a half hours later clambered out of the water at the Battery after having swam seventeen miles down the river.

They are Phyllis and Berenice Zitenfield, twin daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Julius Zitenfield of 207 West Ninety-eighth Street. Both are convinced that they will swim the Channel—perhaps in a year or two. Last night they were so excited and so eager to tackle the Channel tides that they could hardly describe their experiences.

Accompanying them on their long swim downstream was a motorboat with Charlotte Schoemel, a swimming teacher, Mary Seixas, their trainer, and Mr. and Mrs. Zitenfield. From time to time Miss Schoemel plunged into the water and acted as pacemaker, while Mrs. Zitenfield, who is also a powerful swimmer, kept her daughters company when the grind became monotonous.

Adverse tides delayed them and the drizzling rain depressed them, but they made good headway with the same crawl stroke which Gertrude Ederle and Mille Gade Corson used in their successful Channel swims. Opposite Washington Heights the tides delayed them for more than an hour. They partook of liquid food opposite Ninety-sixth Street and from then on the swim to the Battery was uninterrupted.

It was easy, they said last night, except for the cold. Both children were blue-lipped and shivering when they left the water. They were whisked home in an automobile by their parents and then went to a dinner party in their honor at Pomerantz's Restaurant, at Ninety-fourth Street and Broadway, where they received two huge bouquets of flowers in honor of their exploit.

Both girls are large and strongly built for their age. They have blond bobbed hair and blue eyes, are 5 feet 4 inches tall and weigh 130 pounds. They are pupils at Public School 9.

Their next swim, Mr. Zitenfield said last night, which they will undertake "some day next week," will be either around Manhattan or from the Battery to Sandy Hook, which Gertrude Ederle made two years ago. If they make that swim, he said, he would prepare them for a trip to Europe next year and a try at the English Cnannel.

WET ENDORSEMENT INJURES BLAINE

CALLED "UNFIT FOR OFFICE"

Blaine Losing, Lenroot Gaining German Votes as Zimmerman Attacks "Madison Ring."

PRIMARY A BATTLE ROYAL

Future of Republican Party in State Bound Up in Tomorrow's Voting.

By RICHARD V. OULAHAN.

Special to The New York Times.

MADISON, Wis., Sept. 5.—The outstanding feature of the eleventh-hour activities of Wisconsin's contest over choosing Republican nominees for United States Senator and Governor in direct primaries to be held on Tuesday is the hostile reaction to the course of Captain William H. Stayton of Washington, National President of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, in publishing page advertisements in Wisconsin daily newspapers calling on the Republican electorate to defeat Senator Irvine L. Lenroot for renomination and substitute Governor John J. Blaine, his chief opponent in the party primaries, whose candidacy for Senator is backed by Senator Robert M. La Follette Jr. and what its critics call "the Madison ring," which assumes to be heir to the powerful personal organization dominated for many years by the late Senator Robert M. La Follette Sr.

Captain Stayton's action in attacking Lenroot and espousing Blaine was repudiated by the Executive Committee of the Wisconsin division of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment at a meeting in Milwaukee last night. Denouncing the page advertisements as unauthorized by the Wisconsin division, the Executive Committee said in a prepared statement:

"We have given our time and induced our people to join with us in what we thought was an honest effort to bring back beer under decent conditions. When our society lends its name to candidates whom we think unfit for office, we feel that our cause is severely handicapped in the future."

German Vote Rebellious.

The mention of candidates "unfit for office" is an obvious reference to Governor Blaine. In its implied endorsement of Senator Lenroot's candidacy, the wet organization's Executive Committee emphasizes a phase of the complex situation produced in Wisconsin Republican politics since the death of Senator La Follette Sr. last year.

One of its outstanding features is found in the suggestion of the Executive Committee's statement that Governor Blaine, in spite of his backing by the late Senator La Follette's widow and sons and his claim to be the representative of the late Senator's political principles and policies, is not holding the German vote as the dead leader held it almost solidly. Most of the members of the Executive Committee of the Wisconsin division of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment who have virtually repudiated Blaine and endorsed Lenroot's candidacy have German names.

The resentment of the national wet chief's interference in Wisconsin politics by his lieutenants in this State throws an illuminating sidelight on the new setting of the scene on the Wisconsin political stage. Generally accepted as the wettest State in the Union, nevertheless there are plenty of ardent wets in Wisconsin, including active workers in the movement to modify the Volstead act, who visualize other issues as of more importance in their effect on the material well-being of the people.

The late Senator La Follette had, for example, the support of many Germans who, in spite of their conservative tendencies, looked on him as a man of high ideals and devoted to the cause of remedying wrongs of the body politic. Much of his support was a personal support, rather than due to the efficient organizing management of a political body. The number of his followers was greatly increased at the time the United States entered the World War by the belief among large numbers of Germans of conservative tendencies that he was being persecuted for standing by them in what they conceived to be an unjust reflection on their loyalty to the United States, or, in other cases, because of resentment over the belief that they were subjected to indignities and watched by agents of the Federal Government on account of sentimental sympathy for the land of their ancestry in its struggle with the allied forces.

A Personal Following.

In his six years of life following the close of the World War, the late Senator La Follette had the support of an overwhelming majority of these classes of Wisconsin citizens of German birth or descent. But it is represented to have been largely a personal following and not due to the superior workings of a political machine. Their affectionate regard for the late Senator was manifested after his death by the support they gave his son in the hotly contested Republican Senatorial primaries last year and in the equally hectic election a year ago, which resulted in young La Follette, then 30 years old, being sent to the Senate for the unexpired portion of the term for which his father had been chosen.

Strangely enough, in a State where opposition to anything savoring of machine political methods was almost a religious doctrine, there was no great resentment among the La Follette following over the autocratic manner in which the late Senator dominated his wing of the Republican Party. The candidates for office he selected personally were accepted by his adherents as anointed. But since the Senator's death many of his following see a vast difference between his autocratic personal dictatorship and the effort of a group of his lieutenants to constitute themselves into a junta which assumes to exercise party control.

This limited group, headed by the late Senator's sons, Robert and Philip, Governor Blaine and Attorney General Herman L. Ekern, picked the candidates for United States Senator, Governor and State offices who should be entered in the Republican Party primaries as having the approval of the La Follette cause. This was construed by other La Folletteites ambitious for public office as an unauthorized assumption of the right to confer a sort of posthumous blessing in behalf of the late Senator. Resentment gave rise to the allegation that these were machine political methods, to which the late Senator had been bitterly opposed. Some La Follette leaders who were not consulted contended that they had as much right as Blaine, Ekern and the others endorsed by themselves and the La Follette brothers to enter the Republican primaries as loyal supporters of the late Senator La Follette. The cry was sent up that the Republican Party in Wisconsin was now dominated by a political machine which they designated "the Madison ring."

Zimmerman's War on the "Ring."

Fred R. Zimmerman, Secretary of State, whose campaign slogan is a statement of the late Senator La Follette to the effect that "Fred Zimmerman is always right," decided to make war on "the Madison ring," claiming that he, as a loyal La Follettelte, had as much warrant as Ekern or anybody else chosen by the alleged ring to seek the Gubernatorial nomination. Other followers of the late Senator entered the lists for primary nomination on the same platform. In addition to that, they are telling the electorate that the Blaine-Ekern Administration at Madison has run State affairs badly, has built up an extravagant Government with an army of office-holders, many of whom, they charge, are using the time for which they are paid by the State in working for Blaine and Ekern, and that generally the interests of the people are being misrepresented.

While Zimmerman and Senator Lenroot are fighting the so-called Madison ring candidates for nomination in Tuesday's primaries, with Governor Blaine the candidate for Senator and Attorney General Ekern the candidate for Governor, they belong to different wings of the party, Zimmerman being a La Follette "Progressive Republican" and Lenroot a conservative or "regular" Republican. Each is fighting his battle separately from the other, but it is certain that Zimmerman will get the votes of many of the Lenroot conservative following, on the ground that he has a chance of being renominated, while Perry, the regular wing's choice for Governor, has not. These conservatives, while they dislike Zimmerman's brand of principles, take the position that, although there would be a radical Administration continued at Madison under Zimmerman, victory for him would be a smashing blow to the La Follette boys, Blaine and Ekern and those others who seek to carry on the old La Follette personally controlled régime.

Wedge in La Follette Ranks.

To what extent Lenroot will benefit by the resentment against the present La Follette organization at Madison which Zimmerman is attempting to crystallize is problematical. Support given to Zimmerman, who is expected to get a good-sized piece of the German vote, suggests that he has driven a wedge into the ranks of the La Follette enthusiasts who showed their loyalty to the dead Senator's memory last year by their practically united support of his son's candidacy for the Senate. The suggestion is also there that, with La Follette Sr. gone, many of his old supporters are inclined to be influenced by considerations of what they regard as their own welfare, instead of continuing to follow blindly those who claim to be the inheritors of the late Senator's crusading spirit, with a mandate to carry on his works.

If Lenroot should be nominated for Senator over Governor Blaine, and Zimmerman nominated for Governor over Attorney General Ekern, a smashing blow would be delivered to the group which claims to carry on for the late Senator La Follette. That possibility, which Zimmerman and Lenroot contend is a strong probability, illustrates the importance of the present campaign.

The existing political order is so full of complexities that to overturn it would bring an amazing state of affairs. Cross-currents as difficult to explain as to understand have been at work since the revolt against the so-called Madison ring was begun under the captaincy of Zimmerman, with Lenroot leading in its national end. The established order of a quarter of a century, due to the immense personal following built up by the late Senator La Follette, was maintained in the face of the many diverse factors comprising it. Racial cross-currents which he kept quiescent are at work again in a State of preponderance of people of foreign birth or ancestry, with those of German blood constuting 51 per cent. of the entire population. There are signs of some degree of German trend to Lenroot, the late Senator's arch-enemy.

Old Feuds Complicate Situation.

Into this situation enter also stories of political and personal feuds. In his lifetime the late Senator La Follette made many enemies among those who had been his friends and political supporters. Men who stood in the way of what he thought was best for the party wing he dominated fell by the political wayside or otherwise were made to feel the force of his displeasure. The personal intimacy between the La Follette and Lenroot families was so close that the La Follette children, it is said, called Lenroot "uncle." The break between the two men came in 1912. The La Follette explanation is that Lenroot deserted the Progressive cause. Another explanation offered is that Lenroot was cold to La Follette's Presidential aspirations.

The whole story of Wisconsin politics since the late Senator La Follette came into control in the early 1900s is full of incident approaching the romantic that would furnish the background for a colorful novel.

Outside of the importance of the possible disorganization of or material setback to the State political organization that is seeking to continue the control of the late Senator La Follette which the triumph of Secretary of State Zimmerman in Tuesday's primaries would mean, the current Republican Party battle has an outstanding national aspect. The defeat of Lenroot would mean that the Coolidge Administration would lose a vote in a Senate which, if it is not under Democratic control in the next Congress, is likely to be so close that the Republicans will have difficulty in maintaining party control. Furthermore, the election of Governor Blaine to the Senate would be worse for the Washington Administration than the election of a Democrat, for the whole attitude of the Governor is bitterly hostile to President Coolidge's policies and the conduct of his office.

A sidelight on the unfavorable reaction caused by the publication of the anti-Lenroot advertisement of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment in this strangely complicated campaign, and how economic and other issues sometimes rise superior to that of prohibition, even among men prominent in the wet cause, is furnished by a statement of Ralph Elmergreen, a member of the Executive Committee of the association's Wisconsin branch, in which he repudiates the purpose of the advertisement and comes out strongly for Senator Lenroot.

Elmergreen Criticizes Stayton.

After stating that Senator Lenroot is the only candidate running for United States Senator who "has frankly gone on record that he does not think 2.75 per cent. alcohol in any beverage for home consumption is illegal or contrary to the Eighteenth Amendment," Dr. Elmergreen praises the Senator for his friendly interest in working people and mentions that the Senator "was one of the first in the movement that gave the farmer fruit juices and cider regardless of the percentage of alcohol in these wholesome drinks." He then calls on the voters to send Senator Lenroot back to Washington.

Incidentally Dr. Elmergreen pays his respects to Captain Stayton for his insertion of the anti-Lenroot advertisement in the name of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment. He says that Captain Stayton knows nothing about the internal affairs of Wisconsin and that he is "highly presumptuous when he comes to Wisconsin and interferes with the rights and duties of our electorate." And to this Dr. Elmergreen adds: "As an officer of the national association, I must frankly repeat that Captain Stayton has a personal axe to grind and is wholly without authority to talk for our organization."

HULL CHALLENGES PROSPERITY SLOGAN

Charges Republicans Use It to Hide Tariff 'Oppression' and 'Corruption' in Primaries.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 5.—Representative Cordell Hull of the Ways and Means Committee, and former Chairman of the Democratic National Committee, charged today that the Republicans were trying to make "prosperity" the issue of the 1926 Congressional campaign to divert attention from the "oppression" of the Fordney-McCumber tariff act, from the "wholesale corruption" in the Pennsylvania and Illinois Senatorial primaries and from other issues.

The Republican campaign managers were doing so, he asserted, in a manner that was "an insult to a piece of statuary."

Characterizing a recent statement by Representative Will R. Wood, Chairman of the Republican Congressional Campaign Committee, that 96 per cent. of what the farmer buys is free from tariff duties, as a "champion hoax," he continued:

"It is astonishing to find that the Fordney tariff is a controlling factor in the high cost of production, the high cost of living, excessive freight rates to the extent of over $200,000,000, the measurable prevention of the repayment of $21,000,000,000 of public and private debts due us from abroad, the destruction of our merchant marine, rubber and other price retaliations and hold-ups, the growing number of trusts and other price-fixing combinations, the severe restrictions on our foreign markets only partially maintained thus far by private loans of $11,500,000,000 and the percentage of our export grains being less than before the war, unlimited slush funds to buy elections and control the Government, a redistribution of wealth as between agriculture and industry."

Sounds Tariff Revision Keynote.

This and other portions of the Hull statement furnished renewed indications that certain Democratic leaders intend to concentrate on tariff revision in the 1926 campaign and in the Presidential contest in 1928.

"Prosperity is to be shouted from the house-tops by paid Republican speakers as a device to blind and chloroform the people to the greatest menace to free government today—the wholesale corruption of voters and purchase of elections in Pennsylvania and Illinois, for which the Republican party is responsible," said Mr. Hull.

"President Coolidge has a wonderful opportunity for service by denouncing these disgraceful candidates who stain the history of the Republic as Roosevelt denounced Lorimer, and demanding a restoration of decent standards of political ethics, public morals and official honesty. He cannot afford to hug Vare of Pennsylvania and Smith of Illinois to the bosom of his Administration.

"The soup-house myth is dragged forth from the Republican catacombs and made to do overtime in a brazen effort to play on the fears of the ignorant and, if possible, to soften the growing opposition to the unequalities and extortions of a tariff system more highly protective than any in fiscal history.

Sees "Airtight" Prohibitive Tariff.

"Imports of dutiable finished manufactures afford the one true test of whether tariffs are competitive, protective or prohibitive. Thus measured the Fordney law is almost an embargo.

"Eliminating burlaps, which we do not produce, and equalising prices, the imports of these finished articles, which all the people buy to use or wear, were $442,000,000 for 1925, compared with $465,450,000 for 1914, notwithstanding our great increase in consumption. Since retail sales aggregate $4,000,000,000 per annum, these tariff prohibitions would appear almost airtight.

"Tariff revenues, the average ad valorem rate and the percentage of free imports offer no test of the true nature of a tariff structure. England, virtually without the protective principle, has near a 75 per cent. tariff and revenues of $550,000,000.

"We could raise $500,000,000 from sugar alone. It is almost exclusively from articles we do not produce or produce in insufficient quantities, plus certain specialties the rich import regardless of tariffs, that our tariff revenues are derived.

"The tariff is prohibitive on most competitive goods which the masses must buy. The farmer, for example, pays tariff taxes on virtually every competitive article he buys, but in common with all others he gets coffee, silk, tea and some other articles we do not produce free.

"The champion hoax is the Republican suggestion that 96 per cent. of what the farmer purchases is free. In those instances where an article has no competition from abroad, as in the case of farm implements, the tariffs are laid on the materials entering therein, which is the same as on the finished products."

TO SUE CAMDEN FOR ARREST

Youth Said to Be Ill After Imprisonment on Auto Charge.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Sept. 5.—Arthur Logan, 20 years old, of 102 Inlet Avenue, this city, has retained Attorney Meyer Krechmer to institute suit for damages against the City of Camden and its police for alleged false imprisonment and brutal and inhuman treatment.

Logan, who is reported to be ill as a result of his incarceration, was arrested Wednesday night as he sat in an automobile owned by his friend, John O'Connor of this city. A policeman asked to see his owner's license, and Logan alleges he replied that the car belonged to a friend who was momentarily absent. Logan was then taken into custody.

At Police Headquarters, he says, the officer in charge gave him no opportunity to telephone or wire for bail, but thrust him into a cell, where he was kept until Friday night. Logan asserts he was fed twice a day with a "dirty-colored liquid carrying an odor of coffee and a piece of bread." When overcome by exhaustion he was forced to sleep on a bunk for which there were no blankets or coverings. Finally, he says, he was released without explanation.

COOLIDGE PRESTIGE ENTERS PRIMARIES

DRYS ARE SUPPORTING BOTH

Nominations Are Also to Be Made in Massachusetts, Nevada and Arizona.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 5.—Five important Republican Senatorial primaries, affecting the prestige of the Administration, will be held on Tuesday. The candidates for the Republican nominations are:

Wisconsin—Senator Irvine L. Lenroot and Governor John J. Blaine, the latter backed by the La Follette forces.

New Hampshire—Senator George H. Moses and former Governor Robert P. Bass.

Nevada—Senator Tasker H. Oddie and former Representative Edward Roberts, father-in-law of Walter Johnson, the baseball star.

Arizona—Senator Ralph H. Cameron, unopposed.

Outstanding in political interest are the Wisconsin and New Hampshire contests, the power and influence of the President being concerned in these States. The President in a speech at the unveiling of the Ericsson statue before the Crown Prince of Sweden heartily endorsed Senator Lenroot, while in New Hampshire former Governor Bass, an unqualified Coolidge supporter, is assailing Senator Moses as an Administration disloyalist.

In the three other primaries, of far less importance, Senator Oddie is expected to defeat Mr. Roberts by a small majority after a bitter fight and Senators Butler and Cameron have no opposition.

Strong Democrats to Oppose Three.

But all three will meet strong Democratic contenders in November, Mr. Butler—the President's personal friend and confidant—being pitted against former Senator David I. Walsh, a strong vote-getter; Senator Cameron facing either Representative Carl Hayden or Charles H. Rutherford, a Phoenix lawyer, and Senator Oddie against the Democratic candidate, who will probably be Raymond T. Baker, former Director of the Mint.

Dispatches indicate that, in spite of dissensions in the La Follette ranks, Governor Blaine may defeat Senator Lenroot, while in New Hampshire Senator Moses is expected to run ahead of former Governor Bass. A Blaine victory would be a distinct Coolidge defeat, and, so Governor Bass alleges, the President would also be rebuffed if Senator Moses secured renomination. Governor Bass, a former Bull Mooser, has chided Senator Moses for having voted against entrance into the World Court and against various farm relief bills. But on the latter score Senator Moses has replied that he supported the Fess bill, favored by the White House.

Dry Issue in Two States.

The wet and dry issue figures in the Wisconsin and New Hampshire primaries as it does in many others this year. Drys are fighting Governor Blaine and are understood to be more favorable to Governor Bass than to Senator Moses.

A victory by Senator Moses would be welcomed by the wets. The prohibition issue will figure strongly in the November elections in Wisconsin, where a referendum will be held, and in Massachusetts, where Former Senator Walsh makes no concealment of his wet sympathies.

Dry organizations are scouting the idea that their strength will be reduced in the next Congress. The Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in a statement today, asserts:

"The terrific reverberating roars of the anti-prohibition organizations during the past six months had us a little worried.

"We knew that they could not elect a Congress, but we did think they were going to cut down the dry strength. Repeatedly we see the drys winning on every hand, with the wets suffering humiliating defeats wherever the issue is raised. A coyote can make more noise in a given time than a lion, and we suppose we simply have been listening to the coyotes."

TRAINING CAMPS NEAR CLOSE

Peekskill Gets Last Troops of Season —Camp Moore to Run Week More.

Special to The New York Times.

PEEKSKILL, N. Y., Sept. 5.—Harlem's Fighting Fifteenth, the 369th Infantry, Colonel William A. Taylor commanding, arrived at Camp Smith this afternoon for two weeks' training. The negro troops, who have a fine war record, are composed of 900 men. They take the place of the Fourteenth Infantry of Brooklyn and the Twenty-seventh Division special troops, who left camp this morning.

The negro infantry will be the last in training this season. Fourteen thousand troops have received training since the opening of camp.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMP MOORE, SEAGIRT, N. J., Sept. 5.—Men of the 102d Cavalry and Forty-fourth Division Signal Company, New Jersey National Guard left camp today, leaving only the men of the 119th Motorcycle Company, in command of First Lieutenant George Parker of Flemington, and Headquarters and the staff of the Forty-fourth Division in command of Major Gen. Quincy A. Gillmore. These guardsmen will remain about another week and then the camp will close for the season.

The Fourteenth Infantry Regiment, the First Battalion 105th Field Artillery, the Twenty-seventh Division Signal Company and the Twenty-seventh Division headquarters detachment returned yesterday to their home armories in Brooklyn, Queens and Long Island, after training at Peekskill, N. Y., and Pine Plains, N. Y.

POLICE SEARCH FOR WRIGHT

Seek Architect and Companion on Charges of Her Ex-Husband.

BARABOO, Wis., Sept. 5 (AP).—Wisconsin police tonight extended beyond the State limits a search for Frank Lloyd Wright, internationally known architect, and his housekeeper companion, Mme. Olga Milanoff, on criminal charges made by Valdemar Hinzenberg, divorced husband of Mme. Milanoff.

Hinzenberg failed to find the archiold daughter, whose custody he detect, his former wife, or his 9-yearmands under a court order, in a search last night of Taliesin, Wright's Spring Green home.

The Sheriff of Sauk County said tonight that he would broadcast pictures and descriptions of Wright and Mme. Milanoff, as usual in the cases of fugitives.

King Touches British Hearts By Kindness to Ill Child

LONDON, Sept. 5 (AP).—One of those kindly little attentions which King George so frequently bestows and which have done so much to endear the monarch to the British people was displayed during his Majesty's recent visit to Bolton Abbey, in Yorkshire, where he was the guest of the Duke of Devonshire for the shooting.

Every day during this visit to the abbey King George had the speed of his motor car reduced as it passed the parish rectory so that he could smile and wave his hand in greeting to the rector's small daughter, who lay in bed near the rectory window recovering from an illness.

TALLEY SAYS ELIAS VIOLATES THE LAW

SEES "SURPRISING LICENSE"

Such Practice Never Tolerated From Any Other Foreign Official, Judge Declares.

Former Judge Alfred J. Talley, President of the Association for the Protection of Religious Rights in Mexico, said yesterday that the statements of Arturo N. Elias, Consul General of Mexico, made in pamphlets and through the press, were "contrary to international law and recognized diplomatic custom."

Judge Talley's statement was in reply to one issued by Consul General Elias and published in Sunday papers. The Consul General criticized the President of the Knights of Columbus for seeking to enlist the personal influence of President Coolidge in behalf of the Catholic churchmen of Mexico.

Seventeen papers which he said were distributed to the public and press by the Mexican Consul General in New York were listed in Judge Talley's statement.

Not Tolerated Before, He Says.

"The latest outburst of the Mexican Consul General in New York against the Knights of Columbus's protest to President Coolidge on the Mexican religious persecution again calls attention to the surprising license allowed to this official by our State Department," said Judge Talley. "His persistent addresses to the American people by means of pamphlets and through the press are contrary to international law and recognized diplomatic custom and have never before been tolerated from any other foreign official by our Government.

"The Mexican Consulate in New York has become a press bureau for Mexican propaganda. No less than seventeen different pamphlets and articles prepared for the press are being handed at one time to any visitor who asks for them, and these sets are being distributed by thousands throughout the country.

"International law seems to prescribe the following rule, which was promulgated by Attorney General Lee of the United States as early as 1797, and which has been uniformly adopted by text-writers and followed by various Administrations since that time:

"'A foreign Minister here is to correspond with the Secretary of State on matters which interest his nation and ought not to be permitted to resort to the press. He has no authority to communicate his sentiments to the people by publications, either in manuscript or in print, and any attempt to do so is contempt of this Government. His intercourse is to be with the Executive of the United States only, open matters that concern his commission or trust.' (Moore's Digest of International Law, Vol. 4, page 682 and citations.)

"Why the present unspeakable Government of Calles should enjoy special exemption from the observance of recognized diplomatic requirements which obtain in all civilized countries is becoming increasingly difficult to understand."

MEXICO TO LAUNCH BUY-AT-HOME DRIVE

Calles Will Seek to Stimulate Industries, Cut Gold Export and Halt Silver's Drop.

BUSINESS IS CUT IN HALF

Sales Reported Down 60 to 70 Per Cent. in Some Places, With Little Hope of Quick Revival.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 5.—"Buy Mexican Products" will be the slogan of the Government in its campaign to induce the people to purchase domestic in preference to foreign imported articles.

The Government will also adopt strict measures to prevent a further decline in silver and to reduce imports.

According to the local press, President Calles will issue a circular, addressed to all Government departments, ordering them to refrain from buying foreign goods if the same articles are manufactured in Mexico. In the case of foodstuffs everything needed must be bought in Mexico.

Another circular will be sent to all the Governors of the States requesting their cooperation.

Measures will be taken to curtail the exodus of gold from Mexico and to limit the increasing volume of foreign drafts sold, mostly drawn on New York.

A technical commission, under the direction of the Secretary of Finance, will be appointed to make a complete study of present conditions. Its report will be submitted to the Government officials for examination and suggestions as to ways and means to prevent the present business crisis from growing worse.

The National Bank Commission and the Bank of Mexico will also study conditions.

Trade Bodies Urged Measures.

Measures similar to those outlined were advocated last week in a letter to President Calles by the Federation of Chambers of Commerce.

Several merchants dealing in drugs have issued a statement in which they declare that, owing to the drop in silver, they are compelled to sell all their goods for gold.

The merchants say that the retail prices will be increased slightly. They have to pay for their supplies in the United States in gold, they say, so they cannot continue to sell at the present silver quotations.

Gold was at a 5 per cent. premium over silver yesterday.

The crisis still continues, general business reporting a 40 per cent. cut in sales since the Catholics instituted the boycott, although a depression existed before the boycott was enforced as a protest against the Government's religious regulations.

Bargain Sales Are Featured.

Wholesalers here who supply houses in the interior, it is reported, are suffering heavily as sales there have dropped 60 or 70 per cent. since the first of the year.

Large stores in Mexico City are holding sales at low prices in an effort to get customers and to reduce their heavy overhead expense.

Importers report a 50 per cent. drop in orders for all lines except food stuffs, foreign buying in which has increased owing to crop failures due to heavy storms, and the fact that small farmers are raising only enough for their own consumption.

That the crisis will be greater within the next two months is believed by some experts who say that the heavy importation of foodstuffs during the rest of this year and the first part of 1927 will use up large sums which would go ordinarily for luxuries.

No hope for a speedy improvement in general business is seen by these observers, although they believe that if the Government succeeds in obtaining a loan in the United States, conditions will improve slightly. The chances for this loan, however, are regarded as poor.

MEXICAN BISHOPS PLAN PETITION TOMORROW

Chihuahua Congressmen, It Is Reported, Will Present Plea to Relax Religious Laws.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 5.—The petition of the Catholic episcopate asking for modification of the religious laws which caused the present struggle between Church and State in Mexico, will be presented to Congress on Tuesday.

A group of Representatives from the State of Chihuahua, it is reported, will present the Catholic petition, which is said to be milder in tone than was expected, and to request that the Catholic Church receive the rights and liberties of ordinary Mexican citizens.

The petition, it is understood, states that the Church has always been first in the struggle for better living conditions for the workers, and that she is requesting only the right to live and progress.

If Congress refuses to take action, it is said, the Catholics have other measures which they intend to enforce as protests against the religious regulations. Meanwhile, their economic boycott continues and, it is declared, it will go on even if Congress starts a discussion of the petition.

Members of the episcopate are not hopeful of success. The Bishops say that the members of Congress are hand-picked, and that the possibility of relief from present conditions, therefore, is slight.

Even though the petition fails, the presentation of it will show the Congressmen that the immense majority of Mexican's favor relaxation of the Government's restrictions, the Bishops say. This show of strength, they add, will have greater weight with the next Congress two years from now.

Catholics repeat that they are prepared to wait for months and even years until the Church succeeds in obtaining her rights. They declare that the Pope is behind them and the whole Catholic world approves their fight for religious liberty.

NEW HAMPSHIRE ENDS MYSTERY OF INQUIRY

"Good Government League" Is Shown to Be Back of Move, Aiming to "Purify the Ballot Box."

Special to The New York Times.

CONCORD, N. H., Sept. 5.—The detectives investigating expenditures in the New Hampshire primary campaign which ends Tuesday, represent the Good Government League, it was disclosed today when James A. Gordon, Field Secretary of the league, arrived in Concord.

Mr. Gordon's card stated that the purpose of his organization was to preserve the "purity of the ballot box." He is said to have admitted that his men would be on the job until after the primaries.

"I knew of the investigation of political expenditures by another organization. I knew about it a week after I came into New Hampshire and ten days before the newspapers heralded it, but I had no definite direct information.

"I was informed today that the other organization has made considerable headway in the investigation of campaign expenditures and my understanding is that it will continue on the job for some time to come, because, so I am told, it has been rumored that coming campaign debts may be paid after the statutory fifteen days have expired."

William H. Barbour of the Burns Detective Agency, who has been directing an investigation in the State for the past four weeks, declaring insinuations had been made regarding his veracity and integrity, issued this statement today:

The mystery of the persons behind the investigation had stirred an interest parallel with that in the contest of Senator George H. Moses and ex-Governor Robert P. Bass for the Republican Senatorial nomination and the race between Governor John G. Winant and Huntley N. Spaulding for the party's designation for the Governorship.

Mr. Barbour also said that he would leave Concord for Berlin tomorrow afternoon and would be in Berlin all day Tuesday during the voting. He added he would go to Vermont on Wednesday and would be in Massachusetts on Thursday to set men to work.

Statements were given out by Senator Moses and Mr. Bass tonight, both predicting victory.

Senator Moses said:

"As six years ago, I expect to carry every county in the State. I have seen nothing to warrant my believing that my opponent this year will poll as many votes as did my opponent six years ago, though I expect the vote to larger."

Mr. Bass, in a much longer statement, declared he would repeat the surprise of sixteen years ago, when he was nominated for Governor, but asserted that he would "accept and support the candidate they [the Republican voters] select." "This is the first declaration by Mr. Bass in the campaign that he would support Senator Moses if the latter is nominated.

MEXICO TO ATTACH EX-CONSUL'S RANCH

E. H. Thompson Is Accused of Illegally Exporting Relics Now in Museums Here.

HARVARD AN "ACCOMPLICE"

Treasures He Took From Well Were Hailed Here as Most Important Maya Archaeological Find.

MERIDA, Yucatan, Mex., Sept. 5 (AP).—By order of the Attorney General of the Republic, the Federal District Attorney today made official charges against Edward H. Thompson, former United States Consul at Progreso, of having illegally removed from the country valuable archaeological treasures, gold, jade and silver, which had been found by him years ago in a sacred well in the ruins of Chichen-Itaz, where he owns a ranch.

The charges include Harvard University, the Peabody Museum in Boston and the Field Museum, Chicago, which are alleged to have acquired these objects.

These institutions are accused of being accomplices in that they received alleged stolen property.

The District Attorney has received an order to attach Thompson's ranch as a guarantee of civil responsibility.

The objects in question are valued by Mexican Government experts at more than half a million dollars.

Early in July of this year it became known that the Mexican Government was investigating charges that Mr. Thompson was responsible for the illegal removal of valuable archaeological treasures from Chichen-Itza. It was said that under the law such finds should have become the property of the Mexican Government.

News of these finds, however, first came to light in the Spring of 1923, after they had been kept secret by Mr. Thompson for ten years.

Dr. J. C. Merriam, President of the Carnegie Institution, and Professor Marshall H. Saville, head of the Museum of the American Indian, pronounced them at that time to be the most important source of information in unraveling the story of the Mayas which had been made available to science.

The discoveries made in the famous Maya ruins on Mr. Thompson's ranch were said to include priceless turquoise masks, jade carvings, gold ornaments and numerous other objects which threw new light on ancient Maya civilization. They were found in the sacred cenote near the ruins.

The cenote is an immense natural cavern fed by a subterranean stream. It was used by the Mayas as a sacrificial well, in which only voluntary human sacrifices of virgins of physical perfection and unusual beauty were received.

For years during the period of discovery Thompson in a diving suit descended daily into the cenote to a depth of seventy-five feet.

Among the most important objects found was a sacrificial knife with an ebony handle in the form of two entwined serpents biting the flint blade. Fragments of textiles of hitherto unknown weaves; solidified masses of copal embalming human hearts, and beautiful jade ornaments were among other treasures. The gold ornaments included breast shields, pendants, bells, earrings and other rings.

Mr. Thompson was the American Consul at Yucatan in wartime, his appointment being made at the request of the President of the American Antiquarian Society. He went to Yucatan more than forty years ago at the request of Harvard University and the American Antiquarian Society, of which he was a member, to study vestiges of the ancient Maya race.

RUNAWAY GIRL SOUGHT.

Boston Police Telegram Asks Her Detention Here for Guardian.

A telegram from Superintendent Michael H. Crowley of the Boston police was received at local Police Headquarters yesterday afternoon requesting that a runaway girl, May Nee, 20 years old, be detained here for her guardian. The girl, according to the telegram, eloped on the New York bus from Boston at 9:30 o'clock Saturday night.

Detective Michael Duggan went to the terminal of the bus line, Thirty-second Street, near Fifth Avenue, and learned from the chauffeur that the girl and her young man companion had alighted at 162d Street and Grand Concourse, the Bronx.

Miss Nee was described as being 5 feet 5 inches tall, weighing 120 pounds, dark haired and dressed in a green suit. Her companion was described as Edward Devin, 20 years old.

made on Governor Smith by former Mayor John F. Hylan in connection with the transit situation, and derived from these attacks a hope that Mr. Hylan might run independently for Governor if Mr. Smith, as expected, should run again.

They also derived encouragement from reports of disaffection in Tammany and a growing feeling of resentment against the Governor because of recent police raids on Tammany district clubs, where gambling was alleged to have been in progress. Reports have been received by leading Republicans that this feeling is particularly strong in heavily Democratic districts, where the Governor is said to be held personally responsible for the appointment of George V. McLaughlin as Police Commissioner and to receive part of the resentment directed against the latter.

Hearst's Interest Doubted.

Inquiry failed to reveal any basis for the report that Mr. Hylan might run for Governor as an independent with the support of William Randolph Hearst. The contrary was indicated by persons in the Hearst political organization, who said they had not heard of it and doubted that Mr. Hearst would take any great interest in this campaign.

The report of Tammany disaffection also was denied by leaders of that organization. It was admitted that there was some resentment, which is expected soon to be dissipated. The outlook of Tammany is that Governor Smith, if renominated, will receive an unprecedented majority here on election day.

WADSWORTH DINNER GUEST.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Sept. 5.—United States Senator James W. Wadsworth was the honor guest at a dinner given by Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sabin of New York, Miss Florence Wardwell of Cooperstown and other prominent Republicans, at the Arlington Hotel last night, when he addressed Republican leaders from all the southern tier counties. Senator Wadsworth said:

"In the old days, when the people of a community made up their minds that the liquor traffic was exercising a pernicious influence, they arose and crushed it out. They did it under the local option system and by State-wide action. When they did so, they were not expecting total abstinence of every person in the community. That was not their object. Their attack was against the private liquor traffic and the methods it employed.

"The present effort does not stop with attempting to eliminate the traffic, but it goes further and demands in effect that all the people in the country be total abstainers. This is what the combination of the Eighteenth Amendment and Volstead law means, if anything.

"A very large number of people refuse to be total abstainers, with the inevitable result that the new liquor traffic has been set up and spread itself systematically all over the United States. It is busy meeting the demands of those multitudes who resist the total abstainers' mandate.

"Although the Government has struggled manfully and at great cost for six and one-half years to enforce this law, the number of those resisting has not decreased, and if anything has increased, especially by the addition of young people of both sexes. To me this is one of the most disturbing phases of the whole situation.

"No decent person condones, much less encourages, the abuse, of liquor. What we want to do is to discourage and prevent the abuse of it. Four important aids can be summoned to our assistance. They are in order of relative importance: The home, church, school and Government.

"We need not be pessimistic. We are pretty sensible people. By careful Government restriction and regulations backed by public sentiment, temperance was being achieved to a gratifying extent."

Senator Wadsworth also spoke on immigration, saying: "One of the most important pieces of legislation ever placed on the statute books was the Immigration law. Its operation will have profound effect on the contentment and progress of the whole American people."

Special Correspondence THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Aug. 24.—Germany goes to Geneva to join the League of Nations economically the soundest country in Continental Europe. Her productive enterprise, agricultural as well as industrial, either actually is forging ahead or is bringing to rapid completion the purging process necessary to transition from the bloated abnormalcy of inflation to the normal trade conditions stimulated by stable currency. For the German merchant in almost every line, business is improving steadily, both at home and abroad.

It is, therefore, her political destinies that stand in the forefront of Germany's present preoccupations. The Dawes plan is the guarantor of her economic equilibrium, by which, at her own discretion, she may or may not ultimately abide. Locarno and Geneva, she hopes, similarly will insure her political balance in this seasaw Continent of Europe.

Key to Her Foreign Policy.

Since the Versailles Treaty there has been one, and only one, fundamental factor guiding Germany's foreign policy, her resolve to free herself from the armed coercion of her conquerors. It would be well if this fact were more clearly grasped outside the Reich, for it is the key to many apparently paradoxical manifestations. In pursuance of her basic aim, Germany opposed the French in the Ruhr with passive resistance, at the cost of the complete collapse of her currency. With the same aim she abandoned this strategy when its usefulness was ended, stabilized the mark almost overnight and accepted the Dawes plan.

In logical sequence she next proposed and put through at Locarno the treaties insuring the neutrality of the Rhineland and incidentally insuring herself against further coercive military measures on the part of the Allies.

Now she is going to Geneva to complete the program drawn up on the shores of Lake Maggiore by her entry into the League of Nations on a basis of equality with the victorious States which founded it. Already she has participated on an equal footing with those nations and with the United States in the preliminary discussion of the League's biggest problem—that of disarmament. On the League Council she will share with the biggest European powers the privilege of permanent representation. She will demand, and inevitably in the long run will receive, the right of cooperating in the mandate administration of the colonies taken from her at Versailles.

She will agitate, under circumstances far more favorable than she has hitherto enjoyed, the revision of the peace treaty, notably its postulate of the German Empire's exclusive responsibility for the outbreak of the World War, on which is based her moral obligation to make reparation to the victors.

Locarno-League Objectives.

All these, however, are secondary considerations to Germany. Far more important in German eyes are the three immediate objectives of her Locarno-League policy, namely:

1. Liberation of German soil from foreign military occupation.
2. Cessation of foreign control over the German army and navy.
3. Readjustment of German frontiers, particularly in the East.

The Germans may, and in my opinion do, believe in the spirit of Locarno as an abstract conception. But the German Government, like every other European Government, is primarily after certain concrete advantages for itself. It doubtless wants permanent peace in Europe, but not at the cost of perpetual servitude on the part of the German people. And every German, regardless of his political complexion, regards the presence of allied troops on the Rhine and of the Interallied Control Commission in Berlin, the division of Prussia resultant from the Polish corridor and the surrender of Polish Upper Silesia to Poland as so many signs of servitude.

Since the armistice, Germany has felt like a man in a straitjacket. Her first desire is to get this bothersome garment off, take a deep breath, stretch her arms and expand her chest. That is why Field Marshal von Hindenburg—who is convinced that the greatness of his country's future will equal that of its past—is sincerely favorable to the policy developed by the Dawes and Locarno settlements. In opposing both, the German nationalists are simply less far-sighted than this old imperial soldier whom they elected President of the German Republic and whose patriotic ideals coincide absolutely, in the last analysis, with theirs.

Unemployed Number 1,600,000.

Twelve years ago this month the German Empire plunged into war. Eight years ago next November that empire went down to defeat and destruction. Three years ago the German mark was worth 10,000,000 to the dollar. Three months later it had been stabilized at 4.20 to $1. Two years ago the reparations wrangle, culminating in the armed occupation of the Ruhr Valley, industrial heart of Germany, had been peaceably settled by the adoption of the Dawes plan at London.

Last December, in the same capital, there came into being the Locarno compact, designed to safeguard the peace of Europe, as the Dawes settlement did Europe's economic resurrection. Now, at Geneva, the cycle of stabilization will be completed, it is hoped, with Germany's entry into the League.

What is this new member of the post-war brotherhood of nations like? How does the Reich stand today, materially and spiritually? And what does it stand for?

It is the aim of this and subsequent articles, which are based on several years' close and unbiased study of conditions in Germany, intimate contact with German political, economic and social developments and long acquaintance with the German people, both before and since the war, to provide an answer to these questions.

Let us consider first the material aspects of the Reich's present situation. Its outstanding feature, according to German authorities, is the vast number of unemployed workers, 1,600,000 in round figures at the last reckoning. Evidently the payment of living allowances to this unproductive host is a heavy drain on the German treasury. But funds for the doles have been found, and thus far there has been no serious trouble. Moreover, unemployment is steadily decreasing from its summit figure of over 2,000,000 last Winter. And after all, the United Kingdom has supported a far greater number proportionately over a much longer period.

Hope for New American Loan.

The German Government, cooperating with State and municipal administrations, is formulating for the first time a comprehensive program for employing the jobless on large scale constructive enterprises, such as building, railroads and canals. Several hundred million marks will be devoted to this purpose. Part of the proposed amount, some $20,000,000, may be forthcoming, it is hoped, through a new American loan. Public opinion here clearly recognizes that the army of idle labor burdening the German taxpayer is directly resultant from the puncturing of the inflated industrial balloon through currency deflation, and that work will be forthcoming in the measure of German industry's progress toward prosperity, about which there is widespread optimism.

Another painful outcome of the purge period has been the number of commercial failures. Six months ago the Berlin press was recording the daily toll of insolvency under scare headlines. It was always evident, however, that most of the firms which went under were mushroom growths doomed to disappear with the return of normalcy. In his first annual report, S. Parker Gilbert, Agent General for Reparation Payments, pointed this out, and also indicated that the monthly average was not startlingly higher than in 1913. Today it is recorded that the total of the July failures is 23 per cent. lower than the June total, so that this phase of the transition era may be regarded as virtually finished.

Coincidentally with the lopping off of its branches withered by the restoration of normal business conditions, German industry has gone in strenuously for what is called here "rationalization."

Pursue Rationalization Policy.

About this healthful process Mr. Gilbert has the following to say in his most recent report:

"It is clear that material progress has been made in simplifying organization and reducing costs of production. In part this has been done by consolidating concerns in similar lines of business, but in large part it is the result of careful study of productive methods and improved utilization of labor. * * * The business crisis, as reflected in unemployment, commercial failures, curtailed production of iron and steel and in a reduced volume of railway traffic, reached its apex in January and February. Since then there has been a gradual improvement in all these factors, though in some the movement has been slower than in others. It is impossible to forecast how far this gain can be held, but in general the processes of readjustment appear to have followed sound principles."

Under the ehading, "Business Activity" the Gilbert report remarks:

"The volume of funds transferred through the clearing section of the Reichsbank and the postal check system, commonly taken as an index of business, rose fairly steadily from the Summer of 1924 to the Summer of 1925 and thereafter slowed down. In midwinter there was a decline which brought the figures in both cases down to approximately what they were a year before. Since February the tendency has again been upward.

"The receipts from the turnover tax also give some indication of the volume of trade, and in fact show much the same changes as the bank clearings."

Since Mr. Gilbert's cautious pronouncements the business tide has risen still higher, as reflected by the July tax returns made public ten days ago. The Reich's revenues from taxation for that month totaled 674,000,000 marks, one hundred million more than the budgetary estimate. Receipts from income tax increased from 78,000,000 marks in March to 93,000,000 in July, and imposts on stock market transactions were double their June total and triple that of January.

There is every likelihood that Germany's income for the fiscal year that began last April will show a sizable surplus, possibly as much as 1,000,000,000 marks, over the revenue total of 7,500,000,000 marks foreseen in the national budget.

lusia and Catalonia are concerned and on the way to being resolved in the cases of others.

In Segovia, where the first spark of rebellion was signaled, normal conditions have been re-established, the Military Governor having exercised his authority. This fortress was reinforced with a detachment of civil guards.

The official statement further says that the Government is pleased to notify public opinion on the satisfactory state of the question and to have succeeded without shedding blood and without violence of any sort and entirely by the virtual discipline of the military forces and cleverness and prestige of the authorities.

At the same time it is made clear that the responsibility will be placed upon the promoters and authors of the trouble.

While Madrid was calm this morning when it was cut off from all communication by telegraph and telephone, there was much excitement among the newspaper representatives, although nothing happened in the streets all day long. The officers of the artillery were confined to barracks early in the morning. Telephonic communication was re-established at 9 P. M.

King Authorizes Plebiscite.

This afternoon the Spanish Patriotic Union petitioned for a plebiscite to be held throughout the country on the 11th, 12th and 13th this month.

The Patriotic Union states that this would permit the public to give a vote of confidence to the Government.

In reply to this request a royal decree has been issued authorizing the plebiscite.

News From Spain Censored.

LONDON, Monday, Sept. 6.—No confirmation has reached London from Spanish sources of reports current in Paris that there have been riots in the streets of Barcelona and shots have been exchanged between artillerymen and civil guards in Valencia, but the declaration of martial law is accepted here by some papers as an indication that the situation in Spain is graver than the Madrid dispatches suggest. The censorship of messages for abroad appears to be very strict and the news from Madrid published in the London papers is based almost entirely on official statements.

The Daily Mail correspondent at Hendaye on the Franco-Spanish frontier telegraphs under Sunday's date that messages received there say the situation is grave at Segovia where the artillery officers academy is situated and that a sate of open rebellion exists. The Bilbao newspaper El Pueblo Vasco had its morning edition seized by the police. The correspondent adds that the censorship has been tightened more than ever.

The same paper's Madrid correspondent in reporting that quiet reigns in Madrid and throughout the chief provincial centres says only the normal number of troops is on duty in the streets of Madrid and that crowds flocked to the bullrings and other places of entertainment, displaying little interest in the political events of the week-end.

Naval Mutiny Also Reported.

Decree Establishing Martial Law and Official Explanation of Step.

MADRID, Sept. 5.—The text of the royal decree issued today, establishing martial law in Spain, follows:

On the proposal of my Council of Ministers and in agreement with it I decree the following:

Article 1—Martial law is established in the whole territory of the peninsula and the Balearic and Canary Islands.

Article 2—Those who oppose or offer resistance to fulfillment of the dispositions dictated by the Government in relation to the causes motivating the present decree will be considered as rebels and judged in the severest manner.

Article 3—Those who directly or indirectly aid those included in the previous article and those who deny to the Government in an ostensible manner or with pretexts the necessary force it needs for defeating the opposition or resistance which they exhibit will be considered as culpable of the same offense and judged also in the severest manner.

Given in San Sebastian, at 1 o'clock, Sept. 5, 1926.

[Signed] ALFONSO.
MIGUEL,
President of the Council of Ministers.
PRIMO DE RIVERA.

A note issued at 4 A. M. by the Government justifying the proclamation of martial law reads:

The Government cannot delay further fully to inform public opinion in regard to a matter of the greatest gravity, a satisfactory solution of which must depend more than anything else on its active soveregn intervention. It relates to a question arising from the royal decree of June 6 last, which modified the regulations concerning Government recompenses in time of war and suppressed the article which gave the right to renounce advances and annulling all such renunciation since 1922.

It is unnecessary to go to the bottom of this question. The fact is that from that day a series of acts of resistance of the character of real insubordination occurred, although the Minister of War did not apply merited punishment to any of them. But today the Minister of War has learned of a call issued by the Chief of the Artillery Section that all under-officers of the corps on leave should report at the barracks. Besides, the Chief of the regiment of artillery at Segovia has ordered without the authorization of his superiors the return to barracks of his forces, with the excuse that others from Madrid might attack them.

In face of these grave offenses the Minister of War has removed from office both Chiefs and ordered their arrest.

Previously during the night the Captain General of Valladolid and the Civil Governor of Segovia had reported a complete state of indiscipline in the Segovia Guard, in which participated members of the Military Academy, including students, who so senselessly have intervened in the matter.

In view of all this the Government indicated to the King the convenience of his coming to Madrid, which his Majesty agreed to immediately. It also asked for authority to declare martial law throughout Spanish territory and to take such other dispositions as might appear necessary.

Among the latter published in the Gaceta and Diario as coming officially from the Minister of War are suspension from position and salary of all Chiefs and officers on the active list of the Artillery Corps and denying them the use of the uniform. Another measure requires all soldiers in all army corps to obey their superior officers, and a final measure prohibits all active officers in the Artillery Corps from presenting themselves at their barracks or centres of service and from otherwise answering unauthorized orders issued by those who have placed themselves in direct opposition to the Government.

Blindness made officers of the active list in the artillery service place loyalty to their corps above military duty and even love of country. This attitude on the part of military forces is lamented by the country. Circumstances oblige the Government to combat it, and the Government cannot therefore permit the germ of moral rebellion to spread throughout the country.

All those in corps and institutions will surely assist the Government, more especially by fulfillment of their duties.

SYMPATHIZES WITH SPAIN.

But Rome Denies Advising Her on Attitude to League.

ROME, Sept. 5 (AP).—The attitude of Spain, both regarding a permanent seat in the Council of the League of Nations and the Tangier question, is being followed with keenest friendly sympathy here, but official Italian quarters deny there has been any interference in the Spanish decisions.

Indeed, it is remarked, Italy has too much respect and admiration for her sister nation, for the chivalry of her people and the glory of her traditions to presume to influence the Spanish foreign policy.

Therefore the statements published in some foreign newspapers—that Spain's practical withdrawal from the League of Nations was suggested by Italy—is declared absolutely unwarranted. Further ground for the denial is cited in the assertion that, looking at the Geneva situation from a purely egotistical viewpoint, Italy would prefer to have such a friendly country as Spain represented in the League.

REVOLTS FREQUENT IN RIVERA REGIME

PLOT BY WEYLER FOILED

Communists Driven to Cover and Many Drastic Reforms and Economies Instituted.

The news that a state of war has been declared in Spain has been foreshadowed by repeated incidents of disorder in Spain in the last few months, and by several attempts against the life of General Primo de Rivera. Not only has there been bitter feeling toward the Dictator among the radical elements, who resented his abolishment of even the machinery of popular government, but great unrest has been manifest in the army, until recently the foundation of his power.

Primo de Rivera's reforms in the army organization have struck hard at many officers. Only last week the artillery officers called on the Premier and demanded that he resign because of his decree abolishing promotion by seniority. It was reported that he offered his resignation to the King, but the King declined to receive it. Reports of disorders in Spain, however, always have drawn forth categorical denials from the Madrid Government.

The present Spanish Government faced and survived a formidable movement against it last June when a plot to overthrow the Government was discovered through the finding of a grip on a train in which were documents disclosing the plans and implicating many high officials, both military and civil. A manifesto of the revolutionists declared that the purpose of the movement was to restore the freedom of constitutional government.

Weyler Arrested as Ringleader.

General Valeriano Weyler, 87 years old and called "the grand old man of the Spanish Army," who became known to Americans before the Spanish-American War as a ruthless ruler in Cuba, was arrested as the ringleader. Count Romanones, who had clashed with Primo de Rivera at the time the latter seized power because the Dictator dissolved the Cortes, over which Senator Romanones presided, also was said to be one of the leaders in the plot. These two and others, including General Aguilera, Colonel Segundo Garcia, Dr. Maranon, the King's physician; former Senator Manteca, former Deputy Barriovera, former Deputy Marcelino Domingo and José Bermudez de Castro, were fined heavily. Hundreds of arrests were made and radicals as well as high army officers were rounded up.

King Alfonso and Queen Victoria were in England at the time and a close guard was maintained over them by Scotland Yard.

The crisis comes at a time when Spain is taking an unwontedly active part in world affairs. Following Spain's joint victory with the French over the revolt in Morocco, for which Primo de Rivera has generally received large credit because of his reorganization of the whole Spanish military plan and machine, the Premier has been demanding on behalf of Spain that Tangier be removed from its international status and awarded to Spain. At the same time Spain has been demanding a permanent seat on the Council of the League of Nations. This has just been denied her, and it also is assured that England and France will block Spain's move toward a serious revision of the international régime in Tangier.

Premier an Imposing Figure.

Primo de Rivera, the central figure in all important happenings in his country since he seized power one week less than three years ago, is an imposing figure physically. He is unusually tall and strongly built. He has white hair and mustache and a smile that is almost boyish. He is described by those who have spoken with him as cordial, sincere and straightforward.

The coup by which he became master of Spain occurred on Sept. 12, 1923. As Captain General of the Spanish Army he had been ousted from the Cabinet in 1921 for criticizing publicly the conduct of the war with the Riffian tribesmen in Morocco and declaring that Spain should withdraw from Morocco. He had once before been forced to resign from the same post because of his assertions that military associations were exerting political pressure.

On his fall from the leadership of the army in 1921 Primo de Rivera was sent to be Military Governor of Catalonia, with headquarters at Barcelona. To many this appeared to be a sentence of death, for syndicalists in that restless section of Spain had been assassinating officials almost with impunity. Primo de Rivera assumed the offensive against them, however, and soon built up a powerful personal following in Catalonia.

Meanwhile the Spanish Army in Morocco was going from one disaster to another. The masses of the country were becoming restive under the burden of money and lives the venture was costing them, with no prospect of success in view. The army was ridden with graft and incompetence.

General de Rivera bided his time, laid his plans carefully, and when he struck, the authorities were so ill-prepared to resist that he overturned the Government and came into power without bloodshed.

Reports of what went on in the inside of that movement conflict, but Primo de Rivera already was master of Catalonia and held much of the army in other parts of Spain behind him as well when Madrid learned of the crisis. The General is reported to have telephoned King Alfonso telling him he intended to come to Madrid to take control. Other reports were that the King was at San Sebastian during the disturbance.

King Refused to Oppose Him.

The Duke of Alhucemas, then Prime Minister, asked the King to authorize immediate steps against Primo de Rivera and his associates, but the King declined to act. The Premier then resigned, and with him went the Ministry, which included Santiago Alba, who had been the object of much of de Rivera's criticism. From that moment Primo de Rivera had the unqualified support of King Alfonso. General de Rivera arrived in Madrid on Sept. 15, amid the cheers of the populace, and took the oath as President of the Council of Ministers before King Alfonso. He appointed a new Cabinet, and then gave a batch of decrees to the King to be signed.

One of these decrees removed Luis Silvela as High Commissioner in Morocco. General Luis Aizpuru, former Minister of War, was named in Silvela's place. A general shake-up of the army followed. A directorate of nine Generals and one Admiral was put in charge of affairs.

A day later King Alfonso, at the behest of Primo de Rivera, signed decrees dissolving the Cortes—the Spanish legislative body—and suppressing the Cabinet. Military steps were put in motion to retrieve some of the ground lost to the Riffians in Morocco in the Spanish disaster at Annoual, in which General Silvestre was killed and his entire force massacred.

It was understood at first that the dictatorship would last only three months, but the King readily assented to its extension. Primo de Rivera was attacked because of his suppression of the Cortes, but he responded that the Cortes did not represent the will of the people.

The Dictator at once began instituting a drastic program of reforms and economies. One of his first acts was to attempt to stamp out profiteering, and he took steps also to suppress banditry and enforce prompt justice. Thousands of political jobs were abolished. These steps of course aroused the opposition of powerful interests in the nation, but the Dictator was strong enough to ride them down. Communists were run out of the country by the hundred.

Expressed Distrust of Democracy.

At intervals through his régime Primo de Rivera made gestures toward restoring some measure of popular control of the Government, but more recently he has been outspoken in his distrust of democracy. He joined Mussolini in expressing the belief that democracy was beautiful in theory, but useless to conduct the affairs of a nation.

In an interview shortly before the abortive revolutionary plot of last June Primo de Rivera said:

"The political parties never leaned on public opinion or on the popular masses, but only on certain restricted organizations surrounding a particular politician who afforded his friends material advantage. I can assure you that the whole of public opinion is with me, except for a very small number of persistent malcontents, of politicians whose personal interests have been attacked, of anti-patriots and people who are fanatics where the parliamentary system is concerned. But the people, what may really be called the people, are with me."

PARIS EXPECTS FALL OF PRIMO DE RIVERA

Regards the Spanish Dictator's Appeal to the Country as Coming Too Late.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Sept. 5.—Primo de Rivera's chances of surviving the present crisis of his Directorate are considered small in Paris. His appeal to the country and his defense of the Directorate régime appear to have come too late.

There is considered to be much good sense in his advocacy of a National Directorate as opposed to the Parliamentary régime, for in Latin countries during recent years there has been a constant display of incapacity by people of their race and temperament to live up to the ideals and practice of Parliamentary government.

But this appeal and suggestion of a plebiscite seem to have come too tardily. They have the appearance of being a direct countermove to the revolt of the army leaders and officers of the Artillery Corps and as such they cannot be expected to prove very effective, for Spain is still ungovernable by any Government which does not have the support of the army. The day has not yet arrived for Government by mass opinion, as is usual in Anglo-Saxon countries or as has been made the case in Italy through its successful organization into a semi-armed force.

A second reason advanced for lack of faith in continuance of the Directorate is the apparent change in the attitude of the King toward his Prime Minister. At first the King refused to sign the decree against the officers of the Artillery Corps and two days ago he appointed General Berenguer chief of his military household. Both actions are at least significant of the deep rift between the King and his Minister.

It may be argued that Primo de Rivera's decision to make promotion in the Engineering and Artillery Corps depend on merit and not, as always has been the case, on seniority had the assent of the King. But Spain is more bound by tradition than any other country, and even the King cannot force abandonment of that tradition. His appointment of General Berenguer cannot be considered otherwise than as a direct indication that his difference with Primo de Rivera has reached the point of loss of confidence, for General Berenguer is a man whom the Premier sought to disgrace and put in prison.

For many months it has been an open secret that the power of the directorate lay only in the impossibility of a Government strong enough being formed from any political party. This situation has, however, been considerably modified by the revolt of the army leaders on three successive occasions against Primo de Rivera's rule. The King knows that he can at least depend on a union of the various juntas against the present Administration, and that with that degree of union he can take the direction himself. Between the King and his Minister there appears, for the moment, to be fairly close collaboration.

All parties to the discussion are apparently seeking to avoid any disturbance, and reports are unanimous that the country is quiet, every one waiting for the King's decision.

SEEKS TO INSURE POLICE.

Lawyer Invites Others to Aid Him in Group Policy Project.

Gustavus A. Rogers of the law firm of Jenks & Rogers, 32 Broadway, announced yesterday that he had invited several prominent New Yorkers to join him in a movement to provide group insurance for the police, so that the family of every policeman killed in the performance of duty will receive $10,000. Those who join the enterprise will be known as "The Citizens' Police Insurance Committee."

"There will be no legal difficulty about this matter, since the city will not be involved, and the insurance will be personal to the families of those officers who give their lives in the service of their fellow-citizens," said the announcement. "We hope that it will never be necessary to meet the call for this insurance, but we fear that the services of the committee will be needed before Comissioner McLaughlin has cleaned up New York."

LEAGUE WILL OPEN SESSIONS TODAY

Seventh Assembly Will Be Meeting of Peace Insurance Association Stockholders.

GERMANY FIRST IN AGENDA

Chief Task Will Be to Solve Situation Created by Action on Spain's Demands.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

GENEVA, Sept. 5.—The seventh assembly of the League of Nations which opens tomorrow will be a meeting of the stockholders of the greatest insurance association the world has ever known—a cooperative company, formed to insure its members against war; against aggression; against economic losses arising from war and from the shortsightedness of nationalism; against loss of life by disease which can be stamped out by concerted effort and against the loss of morale from opiates, slavery, traffic in women and children and obscene literature.

High officials and diplomats of the fifty-five stock-holding nations will be present and for three weeks they will review the work of the Secretariat, of the Board of Directors and of the various committees appointed to carry out the decisions taken a year ago in an effort to attain the aims and the ideals for which the greatest experiment in peace and progress through cooperation was formed.

As the first item on its agenda this conference will formally accept into the organization the nation which opened the greatest war of history, entailing incalculable economic destruction and which, in fact, brought to the world a realization of the indispensableness of an organization such as the League of Nations.

Acceptance by this nation of the obligations of the covenant of the League of Nations and the guarantee given this acceptance by the Treaty of Locarno are the crowning justifications of the efforts which, through six long years, have gone toward the creation of this insurance company.

If further justification were needed, it was supplied by last week's requests from the Turkish republic to the leading League powers to take on the obligations of the covenant and participate in the dividends of peace of the League of Nations. This will quiet the outstanding remaining storm centre and further will bring the entire Islamic world into orderly negotiation with the conquering Occident. This advance, however, will be consumated by the ninth assembly of the stockholders one year hence.

One of the most important items of the agenda of the present Assembly is to try to settle the stockholders' dispute occasioned by a conflict of national pride and international political expediency—in other words, to arrive at a method of constituting a Board of Directors which will appeal to the sense of equity and justice of all.

The seriousness of the situation created by Spanish dissatisfaction with the disposition of her demands is not to be disputed. Yet the very fact that this is the first instance of this sort which has cropped up in six years to disturb the harmony of the internal machinery of the League must be stressed. Of the fifty-five sovereign stockholders in the League only twelve have so far served on the Board of Directors, which means that there are forty-three nations who may have felt slighted or disappointed by the failure of the majority to recognize the merits which they unquestionably have seen in themselves.

And none of these forty-three ever threatened to quit the League. It remained for the nation who was honored by constant re-election during six years to the coveted seat on the Board of Directors to threaten the League with disruption. And this nation has not demanded her seat in permanence on the grounds of anything except her past grandeur and the unfortunate promise of other Council powers to support her.

After this very important question has been settled the Assembly will turn to arbitration, security and disarmament, to the control of the manufacture of arms, to the pacific settlement of international disputes, to the international economic cooperation, and to many questions of cooperation of less importance.

Then the Assembly session, like all preceding ones, will recall to the mind of the world the unhappy fact that the greatest democracy the world has ever known and the nation which is directly responsible for this successful effort for assuring world peace by international cooperation, is still a stranger to its efforts.

There are at present about 500 American citizens at Geneva, called by the desire to see the operation of our abandoned but thriving offspring. For the next three weeks, they will fight for the privilege of one of the forty seats which, despite American's absence from the League, are still set aside for our nation out of respect for our great national ideals.

They will observe this cooperation for which we are responsible and of which we are not a part with a feeling of pride and at the conclusion of the meeting they will turn away from Geneva with a feeling of regret, if not of shame, that we are the only enlightened nation that counts that is absent.

GENEVA, Sept. 5 (AP).—Geneva never held more people than it does tonight, all seeking seats for the sessions of the seventh Assembly of the League of Nations, which opens tomorrow. All are particularly desirous of being present on the big day, as yet not set, when Germany will be formally elected a member of the League and take her place as a permanent member of the Council. That day is expected to mark the beginning of a new era of European understanding, both political and economic.

As usual, Americans predominate among the visitors, with Mrs. Woodrow Wilson again making the pilgrimage to honor the memory of her husband. Fresh wreaths were placed today on the granite slab in the wall of the League of Nations Building, which informs the world that it was Woodrow Wilson who founded the League.

An outstanding feature of today's services was a warning thundered from the pulpit of St. Peter's Cathedral by the Rev. Dr. Soederblom, Lutheran Archbishop of Sweden, that if the League of Nations would live, its members must refrain from attempts to satisfy their own political ambitions and realize once for all that the League must be made an instrument for the operation of divine justice.

REFERENDUM ON LEAGUE IN MALDEN'S ELECTION

Massachusetts City's Voters Will Decide Whether to Urge Our Membership.

Special to The New York Times.

MALDEN, Mass., Sept. 5.—Malden voters at the coming municipal election will vote on the League of Nations dispute, a sufficient number of voters having petitioned that the question be put on the ballot this year.

It is said that this is the first direct referendum to be taken on the subject in the history of the League of Nations dispute in this country. Officials of the Central Labor Union and Building Trades Alliance were active in circulating the petitions.

The ballot, in conformity with the Public Opinion act, reads:

"Shall Malden's representatives in the General Court be instructed to vote for a resolution requesting the President and Senate of the United States to enter into full cooperation, participation and membership in the League of Nations, with the explanatory reservation that the United States shall not engage in war with any nation except by vote of Congress as provided in the Constitution of the United States, and such other explanatory reservations as they deem wise?"

Daily Style Hint For Well-Dressed New Yorkers

NEW YORK, September 6—At last the whirligig of fashion has definitely swung to brown. If you go where smartly turned out men congregrate, brown is the color that commands notice. However, you are well advised to be mindful that brown must be just the right tint.

Single-breasted brown autumn lounge suit. Unfinished worsted with multi-stripe, self-color overplaid and wide-spaced faint green stripes. 3 buttons. Notch lapels. Half-lined. Piped seams. Exclusive, but not expensive.

Investigators Warn President of Waning Oil Supply for Future

How the Industry Can Help.

The directions in which industry can contribute to assure future supplies are set forth as:

1. Continued exploration for extension of known sands and deeper sands in known fields.

2. Continued exploration for new fields.

3. Systematic research and experiment upon methods of securing a larger proportion of the oil from the sands.

4. Systematic research and experiment in new methods and cheapened costs in refining and cracking oils and waste elimination.

5. Cooperative methods in sane development of new fields to prevent wasteful flush flow and overproduction.

6. Research and application by engine builders of more economical use of petroleum products.

7. Expansion of American holdings in foreign oil fields.

What the Government Can Do.

1. Continued and expanded research by the Geological Survey in geologic studies of the accumulation of oil and structure of oil-bearing areas; by the Bureau of Mines into methods of producing and refining, including oil shales, and by the Bureau of Standards into questions of constitution and utilization of oil products.

2. The more intellectual handling of Government-controlled oil sources on public and Indian lands.

Of the fundamental conservation measures thus mentioned, that of cooperative methods in development of new fields to prevent temporary gluts is declared to merit more exhaustive discussion, "as it is a promising field for important action by both industry and the Government."

With respect to the demand by those who appear to think that Federal legislation is necessary to deal with the oil situation staring the nations in the face in the matter of future supplies, the President's board takes a stand against Federal legislation and in favor of State action, except in the case of Federal oil lands—unless national defense is threatened by waste or exhaustion, or the States fail to act.

Power of the Government.

"The power of Federal Government to regulate oil production is doubtless limited to its own oil land," the board holds, "unless the national defense is imperiled by waste or exhaustion of the oil supply.

"Here the policy of reservation to meet future Federal requirements has already been established and is being perfected, as prompted by increased appreciation of the need and as guided by better understanding of the means to that end. It has been suggested to the board, however, that the Government's jurisdiction as a sovereign owner of the oil under its land may justify and authorize Federal legislation to prohibit adjoining owners from appropriating the oil by means of wells drilled on their property. This suggestion involves many interesting implications concerning State and Federal power, but State legislation for the protection of all owners would be preferable, and the Federal authority, if any, should be invoked only when it is clear that the State is unwilling or fails to act, or when naval reserves are threatened with depletion."

The investigation conducted by the four Cabinet officers constituting the board was ordered by President Coolidge on Dec. 19, 1924, when he wrote them a joint letter saying he was advised that the "failure to bring in producing wells for a two-year period would slow down the wheels of industry and bring serious industrial depression." The President requested that the board "study the Government's responsibilities and enlist the full cooperation of the oil industry in an investigation to determine actual conditions."

More than 100 leaders of the industry met with the board in Washington in February and discussed all phases of the oil problem. Questionnaires were directed to the leaders of all branches of the industry, with the result that the heads of the large producing, refining and marketing companies of the country supplied confidential information.

Two additional reports will be issued by the board, dealing with foreign oil conditions and with possible substitutes and the development of oil shale.

Says Question Has Two Sides.

Secretary Work, in making the report public, emphasized that there were two sides to the question.

"This report," the Secretary said, "is intended to present certain facts contributed by the oil industry or gathered by Government scientists. The facts and opinions received from these sources have been weighed with open minds, without conscious prejudice or thought of confirming theories already conceived.

"There are two sides to this nationally important question that must be weighed wholly free from individual bias and both sides are entitled to respectful consideration.

"Many producers claim the supply of petroleum, having heretofore been equal to the demand, probably always will be, and should time prove the contrary that substitutes for both lubricants and gasoline will be devised by science.

"Other producers argue that almost every natural resource is limited and may be exhausted by wasteful use. To illustrate, they cite depletion of soil fertility, timber and even fish in the sea, the exhaustion of old oil fields and the diminishing flow of all wells. They argue further that without discovery of new fields the present rate of production cannot be maintained and therefore urge that, as new discoveries are uncertain, improved methods of recovery, less waste, more ground storage and checking of competitive haste in drilling are economic provisions that should be enforced.

"These conflicting opinions are based partly upon facts and partly upon conjectures. Such opinions are valuable only in proportion to the logic of their reasons, which therefore must be understood and analyzed. It is hoped that this preliminary report, conscientiously prepared under the direction of this board by scientific men burdened by exacting daily routine duties, may furnish a concise picture of the true conditions as determined by the inquiry of this board."

The report itself, while 7,000 words long, is only preliminary, and the supplemental reports that are to follow will deal extensively with the different phases of the national oil problem touched upon in this short summary.

Concern Over Future Supply.

"There must be natural concern over our future supply of oil," the report declares, "because of the manifest dependence of so large a part of our industrial life, national defense and domestic comfort upon continued adequate supplies of lubricants for all machinery and fuel for automotive engines.

"Our future resources in coal and iron have been so determined by geological evidence and exploration that we can measure our proved supply by centuries. But the local character of oil deposits, their geological uncertainty, and the vast amount of unproductive capital required for long advance exploration, prevent any such advance proof in the case of oil. The very nature of all minerals, in that they do not reproduce themselves, of course renders their extraction a depletion of assets. And therefore the resources of oil which are proved at any given moment cannot, from the nature of things, be otherwise than a reserve against current production. They do not imply future production of oil.

"The total present reserves in pumping and flowing wells in the proven sands has been estimated at about 4,500,000,000 barrels, which is theoretically but six years' supply, though, of course, it cannot be extracted so quickly.

"Another addition to this natural cause of anxiety for future supplies lies in the fact that the maximum rate of production from all fields is in their early days, before gas pressures which expel the oil are diminished, and thus of the current production more than one-half is coming from about 4 per cent. of the producing wells—for the most part only a year or so old—and from fields that have been discovered within the past five years.

New Fields Required.

"Therefore, future maintenance of even current supplies implies the constant discovery of new fields and the drilling of new wells, and thus the maintenance of this large ratio of flush production. Hitherto there has been no failure to discover such new fields as required.

"However, this dependence upon fortuitous discovery of new fields renders it imperative that every effort shall be made to secure the maximum amount of oil from the known fields, and the most beneficial use of the oil that is produced."

The board recalls that the first successful oil well was drilled in Pennsylvania in 1859, and then says, respecting development and production:

"During this period of sixty-seven years over 680,000 wells have been drilled and to the end of June, 1926, over 9,000,000,000 barrels of crude oil have been produced, one-third of this in less than five years, with the production for 1925 exceeding 750,000,000 barrels. The United States produces about 70 perr cent. of the total world production and consumes about the same percentage of the total."

Natural Gas Wasted.

Besides crude oil, the board says, the same sands produce vast quantities of natural gas. No figures were available on the total amount of gas produced by wells that also produce oil, but the volume is declared to be large, and in some fields a comparatively large percentage is "wasted" into the air.

"This waste of natural gas," the report continues, "incident to the past and present methods of capturing oil at the surface, is occasioned by blowing the gas into the air to hasten the flow of oil from the wells. It has been estimated that in the Cushing Field in Oklahoma at one period there was an average daily waste of 300,000,000 cubic feet of natural gas, or more than 100,000,000,000 cubic feet in the course of a year, the equivalent of 5,500,000 tons of coal. Vast wastage of gas has occured at Cromwell, Okla.; Burkburnet, Texas, and Eldorado and Smackover, Ark., and at several of the fields in the Los Angeles basin.

"The dissipation of this gas by letting the wells produce wide open was a triple waste, containing, as it did, large quantities of casinghead gasoline, with the fuel value in addition, and being capable of much more effective use for recovering oil from the sands.

"About 300,000 wells were producing in 1925, the oil being transported from the wells by more than 40,000 miles of trunk pipe lines and 40,000 miles of gathering lines. The industry also employs some 142,000 tank cars and about 400 tank steamships for crude transportation and for distribution of refined products. There are some 500 refineries. The total investment in producing wells, transportation, refining and marketing equipment exceeds $9,500,000,000. The total wholesale value of the products was $1,793,700,027 in 1923."

The distribution of use is set forth in a table giving the fractions into which the 1925 production was split by refinement, showing that the largest percentage was 15,279,000,000 gallons which went into gas oil or fuel oil, and 7,294,000,000 gallons, or 23.4 per cent., into straight distillation of gasoline.

Tells of "Known" Fields.

With respect to "known" oil fields, the board reports:

"The producing and proved area in the United States is asserted to be in excess of 3,000,000 acres, the fields varying in production in 1925 from a daily average of 197,650 barrels for the Smackover field in Arkansas to only a few barrels daily for a number of the older fields in the country.

"As the oil flows into the wells from the sands, due to the pressure of natural gas, the flush flow is always larger and tends to diminish with the release of gas pressure. The annual production during many years has been sustained by the discovery of sufficient new fields each year to maintain a very large contribution from this flush flow. Therefore, supply equal to our present demands hangs definitely upon the rather precarious basis of repeated new and important discoveries."

As to future reserves the report says: "From the most recent estimates it would appear that the reserves of oil available by flowing and pumping wells from present producing and proved fields amount to about 4,500,000,000 barrels.

"Theoretically, this is but six years' supply, and it, of course, could not be produced rapidly enough to in itself maintain the present annual production of about 750,000,000 barrels. These reserves do not in themselves prove a shortening of supplies; nevertheless, as stated above, their life, as compared to proven supplies of iron and coal, is such as always to maintain concern."

Extension of Reserves.

In addition to the "proven" reserves at any one time, the report continues, the known fields in many cases have proved of larger extent than at first estimated, due to the extension of "fringes" of such fields, particularly as the result of opening new sands and, in some instances, the extension of known sands by deeper drilling. The capacity of machinery for deeper drilling has steadily developed, until in 1925 an oil well 7,591 feet deep was completed in Southern California.

"At various stages in development it has usually been asserted that no greater depths could physically be attained," the board asserts, "yet almost every year demonstrates the penetration of still greater depths. As many of the oil sands slope into the earth, deeper drilling of known sands will bring still further production, as well as the discovery of deeper sands underneath those now being exploited."

"Certain parts of the country are known by their geology to be impossible of appreciable oil production," the report says in discussing new fields. Such positively barren areas are estimated to aggregate 43 per cent. of the total area of the United States. But this does not warrant the assumption that the remaining 1,100,000,000 acres of the country, or any large part of them, will be found oil bearing.

"Considerable portions of this area have already been drilled for oil or water. It is a certainty that we are learning each year more of geologic structure at the hands of a large body of public and private geologists, but the percentage of dry holes in new exploitation is increasing. To assert that no new fields will be found would be to deny a very strong law of probabilities, and we may conclude that such fields will be found, but obviously no forecast of their importance can be given.

"There is a wide variation in estimates of the amount of oil left underground in the sands after production ceases with ordinary methods of flowing and pumping which have been hitherto employed. The evidence before this board shows the general belief of oil experts that not more than 25 per cent. of the oil can be recovered by ordinary methods.

"Some leading authorities consider that less than one-sixth of the oil is so recovered. During recent years a considerable amount of investigation and experimentation has been made with different methods of forcing out the contained oil with water, air or gas pressure—either directly from the surface or through the proposed method of sinking shafts and driving galleries underground.

"Some of the authorities on these methods believe that a second crop from known sands can be obtained by these means as great as that already recovered and available in the proved reserves. Such a result, if attained, would add a total of over 13,000,000,000 barrels to our supply from known fields.

"While no positive assurance can be given from the results so far attained, yet it is the impression that developments have proceeded so far as to give strong belief in considerable further recovery from the known sands over and above the estimates which have been made as to the supplies available by present methods."

Would Restrict Uses of Oil.

Asserting that the most essential products from our crude oil are lubricating oil, gasoline and other oils for internal combustion engines, the report says the other uses for oil could be dispensed with, without "an industrial revolution, as other fuels and substitutes could be applied without prohibitive differentials," in economic costs.

"At present about one-half of our crude oil production is burned either as crude oil or as fuel oil to generate steam and heat—the remainder is used as kerosene, gasoline, lubricating oil, &c.," it continued.

"Up until thirteen years ago, the amount of gasoline which could be recovered was limited to the natural fraction of gasoline in the crude product, but the discovery of the cracking processes, by which the heavier oils can be broken down into gasoline, has opened an entirely new vision as to the gasoline supply.

"At present probably 64 per cent. of our gasoline comes from straight distillation of crude oil, 31 per cent. from cracking and 5 per cent. from natural gas gasoline. It seems theoretically possible to crack 80 per cent. of the oil now going into fuel and heat purposes if the gasoline were required.

"The discoveries in methods of cracking oil are of fundamental importance in considering the future of our essential oil supplies, and this conversion in itself comprises a potential of assured gasoline supplies.

"It may be contended that a control of production by which supplies would be reduced would so increase the price as to force the production of gasoline instear of so large a fraction of use as fuel oils. This program, however, raises impossible difficulties in artificially increased prices to the consumer, inability to regulate the flow accurately to the demand and the ultimate necessity to regulate profits in order to protect the consumer."

Production Control Is Stressed.

Better control of production is recommended.

"There are subsidiary phases of overproduction which deserve attention, as they lead to economic waste," the report declares. "At the initial opening of new fields the gas pressure is strong and the flush flow of wells is very large, rapidly diminishing to more settled production, and the opening of new fields is in most instances followed by a fever of drilling.

"Due too often to divided ownership in small areas, the drainage of which is threatened by adjacent wells, a rush of drilling leads to enormous flush flows which temporarily glut the market and force much oil into fuel consumption and, through over-release of the gas, diminish the amount of oil that can be ultimately obtained by flow and pumping. This question is discussed later on more fully."

Waste of Gasoline.

Urging better mechanical devices in the use of oil products, the board says many gasoline engines are inadequately designed for the most economic use of gasoline and estimates that 25 per cent. of the gasoline "could be saved and the same mileage of movement provided if there were more adequate designs of carburetors and engines."

As to supplies from oil shale and coal distillation the report says in part:

"The by-product distillation of coal for coke and gas purposes produces a certain amount of oil. The most adaptable coals produce about four and one-half gallons of light oils and fifteen gallons of tar per ton. This supply for 1925 amounted to about 146,000,000 gallons of light oils and 258,000,000 gallons of tar.

"The tendency in industry is strongly to increase the distillation of coal and the recovery of by-products; the whole of the coals adapted for this purpose, however, would not furnish an appreciable substitution of our liquid-oil supplies. They obviously could not be distilled for production alone, but must depend upon the market for the major products—that is, coke and gas.

"The oil shale and oil sand deposits of the country are of more promise in the future outlook. Very large areas of such shales exist, many of them containing as much as a barrel of oil per ton of shale. Their utilization is solely a question of price. There can be no doubt that these shales will some day be brought into production. They form an almost unlimited reserve and may, therefore, be taken as the final protection of our people in the matter of essential supply."

The right of the State under its police powers to prevent the action of one owner from working a deprivation of the rights of other owners of a common property and to prevent waste or destruction of the common property by one of the owners "seems reasonably clear," the board holds.

"The right of the State to prevent the waste of natural resources," the report continues, "is rendered more important in this matter by the newly discovered or at least more widely recognized facts regarding the role of gas in the oil sands. Gas is more than a commodity of smaller commercial value associated with oil; it is the efficient agent provided by nature for bringing the oil within the reach of man. Dissolved in the oil, the gas makes the oil flow more freely to the well and there forces it upward, and the longer the gas is retained in solution the larager is the recovery of oil.

Protection of Underground Supply.

"Waste of gas is therefore a double waste and the impairment of the gas pressure in an oil sand by one owner may prevent his neighbors from recovering any of the oil beneath their land and himself from securing more than a small part of the oil underlying his own land. * * * If the several oil-producing States should protect property rights in oil produced from a common underground supply, it undoubtedly would have some effect in the direction of stabilizing production, of retarding development whenever economic demand does not warrant and of making the business of oil production more economical.

"Such legislation, although not directly regulating production, would in part accomplish this by freeing owners and operators from the present pressure of a competitive struggle.

"The formulation and adoption of remedial measures permitting a better correlation of underground property rights is all the more urgent in view of the present intense activity of the engineers in perfecting better methods of oil recovery. To accomplish something in relieving the pressure of competition before it is too late, it is suggested that the lawyers familiar with the evidence of the oil operators take the lead in developing the needed line of action in accord with the discoveries of science and changes in engineering practice."

Another avenue of relief the Board thinks would be "restriction of development of operation through voluntary agreement of owners."

"Operators of experience have expressed to the board the opinion," the report says, "that duplication in drilling and the consequent unnecessary reduction of gas pressure constitute the cause of all waste worth mentioning on the production of oil. The danger that much of the remaining oil will be brought to the surface before either courts or lawmakers can be expected to remedy the situation has also prompted the expression of opinion to the board that voluntary cooperation offers the only practical solution.

Wants Uncertainty Removed.

"The uncertainty as to whether the economic betterment through substituting cooperation for competition runs counter to Federal and State laws has served as an actual, or imagined, or pretended barrier to cooperative action, and the removal of that inhibition is asked, although the suggestion comes from the industry that, 'to protect the public, approval of such agreements by some commission or board should be required.' This doubt should be removed by appropriate legislation.

"The voluntary cooperation proposed would need to include the land owners and operators in a single field or pool, which is a relatively small unit of production, so that the possibility of monopolistic control need not be feared. Indeed, cooperative regulation of either the development or the operation of a single pool could control only a small percentage of the country's production.

"The largest flush pool in recent years, Santa Fé Springs in California contributed 11 per cent. to the output in 1923, and no pool contributed more than 8 per cent. to the output of either 1924 or 1925. Indeed, the three exceptional pools last year, Smackover, Ark.; Long Beach, Cal., and Tonkawa, Okla., together accounted for only 16 per cent. of the country's production. Even the flood of oil from the Cushing Pool at the time of its maximum yield in 1914 and 1915 is to be credited with only 17 per cent. of the country's production in those years, when the total yield was only a third of that of 1925.

"In the one instance of cooperative control by the Salt Creek Conservation Committee, the prorating of production in 1922 and 1923 reduced the output to perhaps one-third of the productive capacity of the 600 to 700 wells then producing. The effect of the committee's restrictions on production was a matter of only 8 or 9 per cent. of the country's production of that period.

"The question of the country-wide influence of such cooperative action on either supply or price would, moreover, under any legalized procedure, be always subject to 'appropriate and adequate governmental scrutiny,' quoting from counsel of the American Petroleum Institute, 'to the end that these owners might not be stimulated to undue haste and a wasteful competition in the development of their properties and trade, but might have a greater liberty to consult the economic conditions of the industry from time to time'."

Lack of Cooperation Alleged.

The report cites various examples of lack of cooperative action, among them that of the Santa Fé Springs field in California, concerning which case the board says:

"In this small but highly productive field forty-five operating companies competed, drilling more wells than necessary, letting loose an unneeded flood of oil on the market with resultant disaster to the price structure, and creating conditions of increased operating costs.

"The total losses attributed to this competitive struggle in a single field are estimated as in excess of $200,000,000; but even greater perhaps than this economic waste, involving a loss to the industry, is the loss to the country involved in the dissipation of gas pressure, leaving in the upper Sands oil that might well have been recovered to an amount equal to that actually taken out by the rush methods of competitive drilling and producing."

The Dominguese field in California is cited as an example of development by cooperative agreement among a few large oil operating companies.

As to the Federal Government's own problem, the report points out that the Government is still the owner of vast areas embracing several hundred million acres of land, the title to which is held "really in trust for the public generally." There are proved oil fields in all these areas, and much unexploited teritory holds promise of oil in commercial quantities.

"All these areas," the board reported, "except some special reserves, may fairly be said to be wide open to private appropriation through lease or otherwise.

Increase in Production Cited.

"There seems to be no discretionary power anywhere to resist the exploitation of these lands and the dissipation of the Government's oil resources. The leasing of the Indian lands is progressively mandatory until exhaustion."

Production from these Government lands jumped from 2,153,794 barrels of crude petroleum in 1921 to 12,371,473 barrels in 1925 from the naval oil reserves; from 9,214,792 barrels in 1921 to 29,153,768 in 1925 from the public domain.

"While it is true that the present leasing system of the Federal Government provides for prompt and continuous development with competitive drilling," the board asserted, "the administrative policy of late has fully recognized the advantage to land owner, oil operator and public alike in delaying production in periods of acute overproduction and, as far as the statutes permit discretion, extreme leniency has been the rule in granting applications for relief from the full drilling requirements as set forth in the terms of the lease.

Conservation by Holding Back.

"The desire of far-seeing operators to shut in production until the oil from their wells was needed has been fully met with sympathetic action by the Federal officials. Few, if any, private landlords have been so liberal. The field engineers representing the Department of Interior have also practiced conservation in their enforcement of every possible measure to prevent physical waste and to increase recovery, and in this the cooperation of the lessees has become more and more evident. Federal supervision of this type commends itself in the industry.

"The story of the development of the Federal oil lands is not unlike that of privately owned lands, except that a remedy has been available, that of legislation by Congress.

"But legislation even when free from constitutional questions does not evoke popular support when this purpose is avowedly to put on brakes on development of natural resources. This stumbling block is recognized whether Federal or State legislation is proposed."

Provisions for National Defense.

Dealing with national defense requirements the board continues:

"Under its constitutional power to provide for the common defense, the Federal Government should continue to make and execute plans for an adequate supply of petroleum for all military and naval needs of the future. Tank storage sufficient to meet initial demand should be built and maintained intact against a wartime emergency.

"Underground reserves should be preserved to supplement the commercial supply as the next line of defense and, in the administration of these reserves of oil in the ground which form 'an important part of the national insurance,' future security not present economically should be the sole guiding principle.

"Current peacetime requirements of those branches of the Government responsible for the national defense are approximately 20,000,000 barrels of petroleum products a year. These requirements are adequately provided for under the present normal rate of production.

"In case of war, the national defense requirements would immediately increase many fold. This larger quantity would include the direct requirements, that is, the products actually used by the agencies of the Government engaged in national defense operations, and the indirect requirements—the amount which will be needed industrially to carry out the munition program or other similar programs of these agencies.

"The production from oil wells within the boundaries of the United States at present is in excess of the estimated maximum requirements for national defense in time of war."

Military Needs May Decline.

"It is barely possible that future discoveries may reduce, or possibly entirely eliminate the need for petroleum fuels in the national defense. It is also conceivable that substitutes for mineral lubricants may be developed on a scale sufficient to meet major requirements. With the development of the Diesel engine and its adaptability to motor vehicle use, the military consumption of petroleum as fuel will be reduced per horsepower."

The report of the Naval Oil Reserve Commission was made available to the Federal Oil Conservation Board, which concurs in general with the conclusions and recommendation of the Reserve Commission. The board believes steps should be taken to put into effect the principal recommendations therein, with such modifications as may be necessary.

"The wartime oil requirements of the navy in any overseas campaign would probably include the major portion of the whole deep-water tonnage under the United States flag," the report says in conclusion. "The increasing use of internal combustion engine drives on commercial carriers makes liquid fuel more and more necessary for wartime water transport. The logistic services of the army and navy and many of its combat weapons, such as tanks, tractor-drawn artillery and airplanes, are dependent upon petroleum products for fuel and lubrication. Should the oil supply accessible to the United States become exhausted and no satisfactory liquid substitute be developed, it would be necessary to resort to coal for propulsion.

"Our entire wartime reserve should not be in the form of refined products placed in tanks, for two reasons. First of all, the future needs of the army and navy for petroleum products may be in a ratio quite different from that of present use, and, in view of the natural tendency of gasoline or even crude petroleum to waste when held in storage, a better policy is considered to be the storage of the higher grades of fuel oil or topped crude, from which the needed products could be derived.

Proposes Underground Reserve.

"Further, it is important that there should be an underground reserve in the event that our commercial supply becomes exhausted before that of other nations. This underground reserve should obviously not be drawn upon unless and until other sources become insufficient."

Declaring the Government, "as the largest land owner is committed to practical conservation of irreplaceable raw materials by the protection of the public estate and the guidance of its development," the report says it will continue its search for "pertinent" facts, and that, while the Federal Government's obligation is "sacred and inescapable," State Governments should promptly study the advantage of cooperative action by land owners and oil operators, looking to sane development of new fields.

The States, says the board, should also consider legislation authorizing cooperative agreements, under proper safeguards, and State legislation "with the declared purpose of conservation should be enacted to stop the waste of gas, the loss of its content of gasoline, and the even greater loss incident to reduction of gas pressure in oil sands."

The President's board recommends "active cooperation" between oil producing States in the study of the proposed legislation, with a view to uniform laws, and says that "even more pronounced" should be the cooperation between State and Federal officers having authority in the regulation of oil and gas production, and the Federal bureaus whose investigative fields are essentially coterminous. Cooperation within the industry in both research and action, as well as field cooperation between neighboring operators, is urged, with cooperation of the industry and the Government in planning and carrying out the necessary research "to make full use of all facilities, resources and personnel available."

SUGGESTS TREATIES TO PROTECT CATTLE

Col. Pryor of La Pryor, Tex., Is in City on Visit—Owns Town and 100,000-Acre Ranch.

ONCE AN ORPHAN NEWSBOY

Would Include Canada in Pact With Mexico to Keep Diseased Cattle From the Continent.

A 75-year-old Texas Colonel, owner of a vast cattle domain near San Antonio and a leader in the cattle-raising industry of the Southwest, has come to New York with recollections of the days when he was a ragged newsboy in Nashville, Tenn., and when great herds of cattle were marching across the Southern States on their way to the North.

He is Colonel Ike T. Pryor, a former President of the National Cattlemen's Association, the Texas Cattlemen and other organizations and owner not only of a ranch of 100,000 acres out of a town of 800 inhabitants, named La Pryor in his honor.

By the death of his father and mother, Colonel Pryor was left at the age of 5 to take care of himself. When the Civil War broke out he was a newsboy in Nashville, and as a newsboy joined the Federal forces, selling newspapers to the soldiers and wearing their cast-off uniforms. At 18 he was working as a plowboy in Texas at a salary of $15 a month. The farm was on a "cow trail" on which herds of cattle were driven to the Northern States.

"The sight of all these cattle forever going north impressed me very much," said Colonel Pryor yesterday at the Waldorf, where he is staying while in New York. "The men with them did not seem to have to do anything but ride horses; the cattle just went, and it looked as if the cowboys had a pretty easy job." The sight of these men, he admitted, tempted him to stop his work as a plowboy and become a cattleman.

One other factor made him change his profession, he said. This was a phrenologist, named Fowler, who was once called the "Father of Phrenology." "I rode into town one day and gave Fowler $10—two-thirds of my month's wages—to feel of my head for me and tell me what he thought," he said. "He wrote it out in longhand, and it was so flattering that I have ever since believed it gave me ambition and confidence enough to strike out on my own. Fourteen years from that time I had fourteen big herds of cattle—3,000 in each herd—traveling on the trail northward."

Colonel Pryor said that the cowboy had not yet vanished altogether from Texas. "But on the border," he added, "we use a lot of Mexican cow labor. A step important for the cattle industry is the tentative agreement between Mexico and the United States, which looks as if it may become permanent in a live stock treaty, to exclude animals from anywhere on the globe where hoof and mouth disease, or any other infectious disease, prevails. I was hopeful that Canada would be included in that agreement. This would enable us to keep the standard of our North American cattle."

The Colonel described the vicissitudes of the cattle-raising industry since the World War, especially the slump which occurred from 1920 to 1924, in which period, he asserted, the price of cattle shrank 60 per cent. In 1925, he explained, the situation began to improve.

"Last Spring it looked extremely good," he observed. "The price of cattle pushed up from $35 to $40 and the yearling was keeping pace. Many beef herds were sold at from $50 to $60 per animal, some as high as $70. For some reason which I have been unable to fathom, during the last few months prices have gone down. I believe that when a census is taken of the cattle of the United States we are going to find ourselves from 10 to 15 per cent. short of the high point."

POISONING OF WIFE DENIED BY DOCTOR

Moore, Arrested in Nashville, Faces Extradition to Sequim, Wash., on Murder Charge.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 5 (AP).—Dr. Paul Moore, proprietor of Sequim Prairie Hospital, Sequim, Wash., who was arrested here yesterday upon request of Washington authorities on a charge of murdering his wife last July by poison, is expected to return to the western State immediately to face the charge.

Dr. Moore said the charge was brought against him "evidently as the result of malice and an attempt to ruin him financially." He was released on a $10,000 bond. He is visiting his brother, C. P. Moore, member of the faculty of Hume Fogg High School.

On being informed that William Kendall, a dairyman near Sequim, accused him of leaving Sequim in company with Kendall's wife, after the death of Mrs. Moore, the doctor described Kendall as his enemy and said he "kicked Kendall down the steps" when, he said, Kendall went to his office and charged that his wife was "making too frequent visits" to the doctor's office.

Dr. Moore said that he was treating Mrs. Kendall for cancer and had treated her since the alleged accusation of her husband. He doubted reports of discovery of poison tablets in connection with the death of his wife.

PORT ANGELES, Wash., Sept 5 (AP).—Prosecutor John M. Wilson announced tonight that extradition papers for the return of Dr. Paul Moore, former Sequim physician, from Tennessee to answer charges of poisoning his wife, would be sought at once.

Army Saves $1,050,410 on Waste.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 5 (AP).—The army sold enough rags, old rubber, tin cans and bottles and other hitherto waste materials during the fiscal year 1926 to turn into the Treasury exactly $1,050,410.13. Some mathematically inclined officer has figured out that this salvage revenue would pay, among other things, for 2,812 horses and mules, for all the heats and shoes worn by the army in a year and the combined salaries of the Commander-in-Chief, the Secretaries of War and all the generals and colonels for a year.

NOVELTY TO FEATURE NATIONAL AIR RACES

Four Relay Teams of Commercial Planes Will Cover 36-Mile Course at Philadelphia.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Sept. 5.—Four teams, each of three planes, will compete in the novelty relay race for commercial planes over a course of thirty-six miles, the feature event of the second day of the national air races at the Sesquicentennial Model Farms field, tomorrow. One of the teams consists of "Casey Jones" and Basil Rowe, winners of yesterday's race and a third entry. Each of the planes will fly one lap of twelve miles over the triangular course.

The second event for airplanes scheduled for tomorrow is the speed race for National Guard planes in which five New York planes and seven Pennsylvania ships are entered. A race for model airplanes with twenty-one entries is on the program for the morning.

Douglas Davis of Hopeville, Ga., an entrant in the "on to Sesqui" race landed at the field this afternoon with two passengers.

The navy-operated dirigible Los Angeles is expected to fly over from Lakehurst tomorrow afternoon and arrangements have been made to have it landed at the flying field if weather conditions are favorable. A detachment of 200 sailors from the battleship Wyoming has been ordered to the field to assist in bringing the big airship to the ground.

A heavy rain that lasted during the day covered the field with water and mud, making flying conditions anything but ideal.

GIRL AND RESCUER DROWN.

Life Guards Save a Second Man Who Went to Bather's Aid.

OLD ORCHARD, Me., Sept. 5 (AP).—Miss Lucy Eddington of Waterville, Me., was drowned while bathing here today. William Sharp of Montreal lost his life in an attempt so rescue her. Joseph Quimby of Portland, who joined Sharp in the rescue attempt, was saved by life guards.

The girl was carried out by the undertow. The two men set out in a boat to bring her in. They neglected to put in the oarlocks. The boat turned sideways in the surf and was capsized. Two life guards succeeded in bringing all three to the beach, but Miss Eddington and Sharp were dead.

French to Try New York Flight.

PARIS, Sept. 5 (AP).—Aviators Coli and Tarsoon announce that they will attempt a non-stop Paris to New York flight on Oct. 21 for the Orteig prize. A special 420-horsepower monoplane, with a wing span of 60 feet, will be ready within three weeks. The October date was chosen in order that advantage might be had of the full moon.

Japanese Typhoon Dead Placed at 30

TOKIO, Sept. 5 (AP).—Damage from the typhoon in Central and Eastern Japan yesterday is heavy. Press dispatches place the loss at more than a million yen. They estimate the dead at thirty, with several hundred injured.

ADVISES CHANGES IN GRAIN TRADING

Federal Commission Suggests New Rules for Futures That Exchanges Can Adopt.

REPORT IS FOR CONGRESS

It Says There Is No Need for General Legislation, but Urges a Law to Protect Deposits.

TRADING FOR QUICK TURN HIT

Use of Stop-Loss Order Discouraged and Other "Shortcomings" of Present System Enumerated.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 5.—Important administrative changes in the conduct of "future" trading in grain, which can be put into effect by those immediately concerned, are suggested in a report on the subject prepared for the consideration of Congress and made public today by the Federal Trade Commission.

The commission does not believe there is pressing need at present for supplemental general legislation in regulation of grain exchanges, but recommends the advisability of a law that would adequately protect customers' deposits with brokers.

In this connection it urges legislation to limit the extent to which the resources of a house could be lent or pledged on behalf of any individual, partner or other person, similar to the regulation of loans by national banks under the National Bank act.

The commission's report suggests to the grain exchanges and grain brokers that there are certain "shortcomings" in the operation of the future market, and lists among these the lack of cooperative handling of grain at the terminal markets.

This state of affairs, the commission states, impairs the competitive power of the grain merchants without large capital.

Another evil growing out of this system, according to the commission, is the tendency to exclude from the opportunity economically to make or to take delivery on futures the vast majority of those who may use the future market in a businesslike way, either for hedging or speculation.

"It would seem that some method might be devised by which the so-called public elevators would again perform a public warehouse service," says the report.

Operation by Railways Suggested.

"Public storage is properly a public utility function and not a mere incident to trading in grain or in futures on a large scale."

The commission in this connection repeated a previous recommendation that the railroads themselves operate the public storage facilities, which, in most cases, they already own, and that they operate them as terminal facilities connected with grain transportation in much the same way as a terminal freight yard for other merchandise is operated.

The commission does not regard as equitable the present requirement that terminal elevators bidding the country direct shall deduct from the terminal market price an amount corresponding to the commission that would be charged if the grain were actually handled by a commission man on consignment before reaching the elevator.

The commission asserts that "the possible tendency of professional or inside traders to make the futures show a downward bias and to cause undue discounts calls for attention," it adds:

"When futures traded in many months ahead of delivery tend to show large discounts, the shortening of the term of such futures—which under such circumstances are of doubtful serviceableness to the grain trade—might well be considered; in other words, the exchanges might provide for a conditional suspension of trading in deferred, as distinguished from near-by deliveries, when the discounts become excessive.

"This refers to discounts where the cash and futures relate to the same crop year. A very large discount on a new crop option may not be excessive.

Impartial Opinions Advised.

"Recommendations relating to manipulation are naturally based largely on the desirability of removing from the market influences that are arbitrary in their nature.

"Adoption of the complete clearing house at Chicago in September, 1925, anticipated a recommendation that this be done, largely with a view to reducing the practice of discretionary credit (primarily between clearing members) in connection with speculative trades, both with reference to the granting of too much credit to favored individuals and to the undue control by this means over traders of small financial resources.

"Regular provision should be made for the inclusion of impartial outsiders in the decision of questions of great general importance, as, for example, in decisions with regard to applications of the anti-corner rule or the emergency car delivery rule and similar matters wherever the exercise of discretion is involved.

"An emergency rule relative to corners and squeezes that might well be adopted would, under special emergency conditions, provide for delivery on Chicago contracts outside Chicago."

Declaring that stabilization of prices is generally regarded as of the greatest possible importance both to consumer and producer, the commission recommends the elimination of methods of trading that tend to cause useless fluctuation.

Trading for Quick Turn Attacked.

"There is apparently too much speculation for the quick turn," it says. "This applies especially to outsiders who attempt to imitate the scalpers, buying or selling for a profit or loss of a cent a bushel and keeping their trades open only a day or so.

"The price judgments of such traders do not make a useful contribution to the market. This type of trader might to some extent be kept out by providing for registration of persons wishing to speculate in grain futures. A different atmosphere in the commission houses would also help, but this is rather a matter of trade ethics.

"The use of stop-loss orders should be discouraged, because it tends, on the whole, to impair rather than promote stability of prices.

"To the same end, very heavy trading of the plunger type should be carefully supervised.

"General statistics of the volume of open trades from day to day by options should be made available for the use of traders generally.

"Rules requiring well defined and adequate margin deposits of customers should be adopted by the Exchanges. For this purpose traders might have to be classified with reference to the margin needed, with regard to the customer's convenience, as well as in order to lessen the temptation of the broker to take undue risks in employing otherwise idle cash deposits of customers. It might be made a general rule that securities be accepted, under proper conditions, for margins."

Government Audit Recommended.

The suggestion is made that stricter margin rules would help to keep out of the market "an undesirable gambling element."

Stressing the care that should be taken of customers' deposits, the report asserts that, because of his membership on a speculative exchange the broker "is likely to be tempted to use them in speculative and unduly risky ventures."

Following its recommendation that legislation should be enacted regulating such loans along the lines of the supervision exercised over loans made by national banks, the commission states that the books of all commission houses receiving deposits from the public to margin speculative trades or futures contracts should be regularly subjected to Government audit.

"Certain members of the Exchange," it adds, "have voiced objections to corporations having limited liability being privileged to become members, a point of view in which the commission concurs.

"An extreme development as regards the responsibility of brokers for the funds of customers is reached where Exchange members generally are jointly liable on dealings of outsiders with any member.

"This appears to be in the line of progress, although not a thing to be expected in the near future."

The report says future trading is carried on at a very considerable direct cost, amounting to $20,000,000 a year or more, chiefly commissions, for the Chicago Board of Trade alone.

Service Is Held Important.

"But its service to the grain trade," the commission thinks, "through the hedging facility afforded, is believed by those in the trade to be more than commensurate with the cost.

"Its service to the community generally, through its assistance in promoting more effective competition in the merchandising of grain by enabling the dealer with small capital to limit his risk, is even more important."

The statement is made that grain futures have but a small share in the total of unwise speculation.

"An estimate shows only about 11,000 active accounts on the books of Chicago houses at a time of much public interest in grain futures," the report states.

"Furthermore, such evidence as is available indicates that these were largely accounts of persons who, financially speaking, could afford to indulge a taste for gambling, if their trades were of that nature."

The Exchanges are told that any measures they might adopt making more exactions as regards the character of the customers of their members and of these customers' methods of trading would tend to improve the situation.

Registration of persons desiring to trade in futures might help in the development of a consciousness of the responsibilities involved, the commission states.

"The demonstrably incompetent ought to be excluded from the market, both for the sake of themselves and for the sake of the market, but it is especially the correct functioning of the market that should be emphasized."

General Observations Made.

"The speculator should be so dealt with that he will encounter only the price risk that he intends to assume. It is highly desirable, without tying up cash unproductively, to prevent the broker's employment of the margins entrusted to him either in speculative ventures of his own or in granting credit to other speculators.

"The correct functioning of the market often suffers from its domination by large traders, the plunger, the cornerer or the powerful elevator interest.

"Regular statistical reports of the volume of open trades and possibly the limitation, or at least the watchful supervision, of large individual open interests are needed to prevent such domination.

"The principal cost of future trading is the general social cost of the vice of gambling as it relates to futures.

"The advisability of attempting to prevent gambling in this case is especially doubtful, because it is very difficult to fix by law a satisfactory and workable definition of gambling trades.

"For this reason it is better not to be in haste to impose legislative restrictions.

"The exchanges themselves, as guardians of the correct functioning and serviceability of the market, ought to effect the necessary fundamental improvement.

"In this matter the broker holds the key to the situation, as he is in the best position to recognize and prevent incompetent speculation as well as mere gambling.

"But successful reform in this direction supposes the education of many members of the exchanges with regard to the general market and the social effects of some of their practices, as well as regulation by the exchanges to establish and enforce such standards as will relieve them from the charge of being largely institutions for gambling."

Two Commissioners Dissent.

The commission is of the opinion that the supervisory and regulatory power conferred upon the Secretary of Agriculture by the Grain Futures act constitute needed means for obtaining corrective action by the grain exchanges.

Commissioners Thompson and Nugent do not concur in the conclusions of the majority of the commission. Appended to the report is a statement that Commissioner Thompson does not believe that the recommendations for remedying the alleged evils of future trading as at present practiced are adequate. In this dissent he was joined by Commissioner Nugent.

STAGE HANDS WIN INCREASE IN WAGES

2,200 Workers Ratify 20% to 40% Rise, Ending the Threat of Strike.

CONTRACT RUNS TWO YEARS

Union Abandons Demand for a Minimum Stage Crew of Nine—Eight-Hour Day Granted.

Wage increases of 20 to 40 per cent. have been granted to stage hands of New York theatres and a new two-year agreement has been ratified by them, it was announced yesterday following a mass meeting of Theatrical Protective Union, Local 1, at Bryant Hall. The agreement affects about 2,200 stage hands, including those of legitimate theatres, vaudeville, burlesque and motion picture houses and stage construction shopmen.

The stage hands had demanded an increase of about 40 per cent., and while the vote to accept the new terms was not unanimous, it was by a good majority. The former agreement with the managers ends today and conferences over the proposed increases have been held by the union's negotiating committee and the Labor Committee of the International Theatrical Managers' Association, at which there loomed the possibility of a strike should a settlement not be reached.

Rates of Wage Increases.

By the new terms agreed upon, the heads of carpentry, electrical and property departments in the legitimate theatres get a $10 a week increase. The "grips," clearers and operators engaged in manipulating scenery, receive an increase of $1 for each performance and for rehearsals, overtime and broken time, increases of 25 to 50 cents an hour were granted. Shop employes and journeymen will get an increase of $2 a day, apprentices $1 and car loaders $2 more.

Ralph W. Long, general manager for the Shuberts and Chairman of the Managers' Labor Committee, said yesterday that the union's demand for a minimum stage crew of nine men, which was one of the points to which strenuous objection was made, has been abandoned, and that the old minimum of three men stands. An eight-hour day was granted to the stage hands, Mr. Long said.

Besides Mr. Long, the committee which negotiated with the stage hands for the managers included Leonard Bergman, general manager for A. L. Erlanger; Walter Vincent of Wilmer & Vincent; L. Lawrence Weber and Ligon Johnson, counsel for the International Theatrical Managers' Association. On the union's committee were Samuel Goldfarb, President; J. C. McDowell, Secretary; Joseph Magnolia, Julius Dannenberg and Harry Sheeran.

For the employers the agreement was signed by the officers of the International Theatrical Association, Inc., the managers of legitimate vaudeville and burlesque theatres and the owners of motion picture theatres.

In the vaudeville, burlesque and picture houses the heads of departments will receive an increase of $7 a week and 25 cents an hour additional for overtime.

SEIZE FOUR IN KILLING.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, Sept. 5.—The police made four arrests tonight in connection with the murder of Fred de Mario, a Philadelphian, who was shot to death early Saturday morning at the Egg Harbor Café. The persons held for investigation are Samuel Solane, 26 years old; Catherine Silverberg, 21, and Albert Silverberg, 21. James Kirvin, 33, of 4 Fox Terrace, this city, is being held as a material witness.

Solane and the two Silverbergs were arrested by Detectives Seruby and Eckstein in front of the Domino Hotel at Atlantic and Mississippi Avenues. A car bearing a license plate which was seen leaving the scene of the murder after de Mario was slain was noticed by the police Sunday morning parked in front of the hotel. The detectives waited six hours until the two men and the woman entered the car.

FARRINGTON A LABOR TOPIC.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Sept. 5.—The delegates to the Trades Union Congress, which opens at Bournemouth tomorrow, were busy today discussing two sensations.

First of all, it is stated, that Frank Farrington, fraternal delegate to the conference from America, is not likely to attend as a result of his acceptance of the position as labor adviser to the Peabody Iron and Coal Company at a salary of $25,000 a year. Cablegrams have been passing between the British Trades Union Congress and the American Federation of Labor on the matter.

More excitement was caused, however, by a report that Yarotsky, one of the Soviet delegates to the conference, whose entry into this country was forbidden by the Government, succeeded in eluding the authorities and is now hiding in Bournemouth with the intention of making a dramatic appearance at the congress. Te police had heard that an attempt would be made by the debarred Russian delegates to reach Bournemouth, ad a special watch was kept at all British ports in consequence. It is believed that Yarotsky escaped the net and entered the country in disguise and under a false name.

Outstanding Events Here On Labor Day Program

Labor Day celebrations will be held throughout New York and other parts of the country today by union organizations.

In the metropolitan district interest will centre in a Labor Day celebration to be held this afternoon at the Fort Hamilton Reservation, Brooklyn, under the auspices of the Central Trades and Labor Council. Colonel M. B. Stokes, Commandant at Fort Hamilton, will deliver an address of welcome, and Joseph P. Ryan, President of the Central Trades and Labor Council, will respond. There will be other addresses. There will be a polo match, athletic contests, a parade of union members and a military review.

The Loyal Labor Legion will hold an all-day outing, including athletic events, at Duer's Whitestone Park, Whitestone Landing, L. I., and will parade twice through Harlem from and to its headquarters, 174 East 116th Street, when it boards the steamer for Whitestone Landing and when it returns. More than 5,000 members are expected to take part.

CHALLENGES WHALING ON CITY PRESBYTERY

J. E. Bennet Says Few of the Leaders Have 'Backbone' Enough to Remain Orthodox.

James E. Bennet, a lawyer, of 38 Park Row, made public yesterday a letter written the previous day to Professor Thornton Whaling of the Louisville, Ky., Southern Presbyterian Theological Seminary, declaring that the information Dr. Whaling had in regard to the Presbytery of New York was "in several respects erroneous," and taking issue with Dr. Whaling in virtually all his conclusions.

Dr. Whaling completed recently a detailed investigation of the theology of the local Presbytery and last week made his findings public. He gave the Presbytery a clean bill of health theologically.

Mr. Bennet is clerk of the Session of the Fort Washington Presbyterian Church and acts as secretary of the group of Fundamentalist elders that meets from time to time.

He says very few of the more than fifty secretaries of boards and professors in seminaries who, Dr. Whaling argued, would surely be defenders of the faith have "backbone" enough to remain fundamental and orthodox when it comes time to vote. He declares they occupy "No Man's Land."

Answering Dr. Whaling's declaration that the Rev. Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin, President-elect of Union Theological Seminary, would maintain that institution "upon the basis of the hearty evangelism which marked its early history," Mr. Bennet says that the reports of seetings of the Presbytery for the last several years show that Dr. Coffin has stirred up more arguments in the Presbytery than any other one member.

Mr. Bennet declares Union Seminary is the chief trouble-maker in the Presbytery, and accuses it of carrying on "religious anarchy."

JUSTICE THREATENS TO QUIT

W. B. Stephens of Pleasantville, N. J., Irate at Order for Review of Case

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Sept. 5.—When Police Justice William B. Stephens of Pleasantville received an order from Common Pleas Judge William H. Smathers last night to submit evidence next Thursday for a review of a case disposed of a month ago by the Justice, the latter threatened to resign.

"I've been harassed like this ever since I took office three years ago," said Stephens, "and I'm ready to quit. This defendant lost his right of appeal when he failed to file a bond ten days after he was fined and now I'm to be dragged again into court and put to expense and inconvenience by this order of Judge Smathers."

The Justice said the defendant in the case had paid his fine after pleading guilty to one charge. The defendant, Michael Cooper, was accused of violating traffic laws.

PICKED ROOT OF 100 IN BRICKLAYER FIGHT

Union Rejected All but Him of Men Suggested for Board to End Jurisdiction Dispute.

LABOR PROGRESS REVIEWED

Ralph M. Easley Praises Strides Taken in Banking and Insurance—Warns of Communists in Strikes.

Elihu Root, former Secretary of State, was the only one on a list of 100 names which the bricklayers and plasterers found acceptable as impartial arbitrator in October of their jurisdictional dispute, Ralph M. Easley, Chairman, told the Department on Industrial Relations of the National Civic Federation in an address made public yesterday.

In disclosing the inside facts of the selection of Mr. Root, Mr. Easley said in part:

"After nearly everybody had tried a hand at bringing about a settlement (between the bricklayers and the plasterers) in 1925, especially the building trade employers—who were not concerned about the terms of the settlement but simply that the controversy should be settled—William Green, President of the American Federation of Labor, appealed to both sides in the interest of labor itself to stop their scandalous internecine quarrel which was furnishing the anti-union employers forceful arguments against having anything whatever to do with the unions.

Rejected All But Mr. Root.

"After working for months he brought about a truce based upon the agreement that the matter should be submitted to arbitration, each side to appoint a representative and the two men thus named to agree upon the third. There was no trouble about the selection of the two representatives, the President of the organization being named in each case. Then came the tug! Whom could they agree to trust as the umpire, since, under the circumstances, the settlement of the dispute would be entirely in his hands? Mr. Green submitted to them more than 100 names, but the only one acceptable to both was that of the great lawyer-statesman, the Hon. Elihu Root. Mr. Green lost no time in soothing the Senator and prevailing upon him to perform this great service despite the inroads which it would make upon his time."

Mr. Easley deemed the progress made toward future harmony between the two unions as "symptomatic of the rapidly growing understanding between our so-called capital and labor groups."

In his address to his associates Mr. Easley enumerated various other high spots in the capital-labor situation. Noting that "Labor Day, 1926, finds us without a single strike of national magnitude and also without one in sight," Mr. Easley hailed "the beginning of the arbitration by the Federal Railroad Mediation Board of the controversy between the railway systems of the United States, covering 260,000 miles, and the railway workers, 1,800,000, now demanding a wage increase averaging from 20 to 30 per cent."

Praises Labor Activities.

A growing and widening sentiment "for sane methods of procedure in developing trade union policies," Mr. Easley observed, was also indicated in "the well-known success of labor's financial institutions, there being now thirty-eight labor banks with total resources in ex ss of $150,000,000; its recently organized life insurance corporation, which promises to be equally successful, and the experiment launched two years ago by the International Association of Machinists, known as the B. & O. Efficiency Plan, which has worked so satisfactorily that similar plans have been adopted by the Chicago & Northwestern and the Canadian National Railroad companies."

Mr. Easley also noted with approval "the recent declaration of the American Federation of Labor against interference by the State in industry and its proposal that the Secretary of Commerce should call a conference made up of representatives of all the productive forces—farming, labor, manufacturing, transportation, banking, engineering, and so forth, for the purpose of considering the various business and industrial problems constantly arising in Congress, that recommendations might be made to it openly instead of through paid lobbyists working under cover to secure special group advantages."

Mr. Easley also endorsed the refusal of the American Federation of Labor to support any move to gain recognition of Soviet Russia. He pointed to the experience of labor movements in European countries which had found, he said, that on gaining entrée for the Russians the latter had turned upon them and sought to undermine both their Governments and their labor organizations. He referred to the present strikes in the cloak and suit industry here and the textile industry in Passaic, as well as to the recent furriers' strike in this city. He asserted that all three illustrated "the viciousness of the 'boring in' tactics of the Communists." He expressed the opinion that the Executive Committees of both the garment workers and the furriers had been "captured by the Communists and the strikes were practically initiated by and directed from Moscow."

He warned of Communist activities in general, for all the Communist Party had not more than 15,000 members. He quoted an attack Berlin Communists had made upon the Union Labor Life Insurance Company, calling it typical of "trade-union capitalism."

NATION'S PROBLEMS LISTED BY MORRISON

Labor Day Message Deals With Company Unions, Congress and Injunctions.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 5 (AP).—In a Labor Day message made public tonight Frank Morrison, veteran Secretary of the American Federation of Labor, said that in his opinion three problems were paramount before the American people. Without offering any solution, he enumerated them as, industridlly, the company "union"; politically, "a growing disbelief in the value of Congress," and in the judicial field the "injunction judge."

Taking up each in turn, he said that "these employer-controlled institutions would assume the form, but not the spirit, of the trade unions," terming them "paternal in intent" and denying "an independence and vigor that mark the legitimate trade unions."

The Secretary held that "a common disbelief in the value of Congress is encouraged by those who favor the Mussolini idea" and who "consider the people's representatives as a barrier to their will, and at every opportunity they attempt to bring Congress into popular contempt."

"The practice of issuing orders, unsupported by law, in times of industrial dispute," the message said, "is an evil that strikes at our system of government, just as do those secret adherents of the dictator theory."

Surveying the last year, the Secretary said that the labor movement "had seen substantial gains," that wages were increased, hours reduced, working conditions improved and the general social and economic advance that marked the history of the American Federation of Labor had been maintained," and asserted that "the workers can look forward with enthusiasm and hope."

CANTON STRIKE PICKETS OUSTED BY THE BRITISH

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

HONGKONG, Sept. 5.—It is understood that at a conference in Hongkong last week a free hand was given the senior naval officer at Canton.

On Saturday marines landed at the steamboat company's wharf near Shameen, the foreign residential settlement which is British property, and ordered the strike pickets to leave. As the latter failed to comply, the marines arrested five yesterday and two today.

Gunboats are berthed alongside the wharf, which the marines are guarding, while Chinese police and troops are lined up along the bund. There has been no violence up to the present.

The strike committee has now instructed the pickets to cease trespassing on foreign property and the revolutionary republican party is holding demonstrations in protest against the action of the British.

The pickets have occupied the wharf since the boycott began and most of the shooting occurred there.

Gypsy Band Leaves New Rochelle.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., Sept. 5.—More quietly than when they entered New Rochelle several weeks ago, the gypsies who have been living in vacant stores throughout the city, have departed for unknown quarters in their automobiles. Several of their young women were arrested on fortune telling charges and they were warned to leave town or appear in City Court.

CHURCH AID TO LABOR GROWING, SAYS GREEN

this would be the amount of money distributed under the operation of the workmen's compensation legislation, all of which comes out of the earnings of industry. It would be a very large and astounding amount."

The working people needed trades unions, Mr. Green said, because they were idealistic and spiritualistic. Wages meant life and living, not profits, he added. The unions directed their efforts to human betterment, and were found allied with every movement organized for community, social and civic betterment.

Priest Commends B. & O. Plan.

The Right Rev. John H. Ryan, Director of the Social Action Department of the National Catholic Welfare Conference at Washington, also addressed the gathering and urged the value of labor sharing in management, so far as production was concerned. He warned that trades unionists were becoming somewhat apathetic toward their unions, however.

Father Ryan praised the plan of cooperation the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad had worked out with its shop crafts, and which had been adopted by the Canadian National, the Chicago & Northwestern and the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroads.

"The longer the arrangement is in operation," he said, "the more it is likely to become extended to matters which may not have been in the mind of either employer or employe at the beginning. The greatest merits of the plan are that it began with the simplest problems and has enabled the employes to introduce themselves gradually to the more difficult and more responsible phases of management. The principles and methods of the B. & O. plan can be applied to every variety of industry. It will mean that the employes come to look upon themselves more as partners than as hired men."

He strongly advised organized labor to press for extension of this form of cooperation along with the other salient features of its program.

Father Ryan said that the workers were proving too content to get along with benefits offered by welfare departments conducted by their employers. "Working conditions," he said, "were one of the three major problems which had brought unions into being—the two others being wages and length of the working day."

Warns Unions of Apathy.

"As for the main object of trade union activity, higher wages," he declared, "the majority of union members have become relatively indifferent. They are tolerably satisfied with the part which they are obtaining in the present condition of alleged general prosperity. As a consequence, the members do not attend the meetings of their unions and the proceedings are devoid of interest and constructive discussion. The leaders are unable to show that the union is a vital necessity. The final and most significant result is that the workers are becoming more and more satisfied with things as they are and more and more dependent upon the good-will of their employers. Obviously, this condition is little more than a benevolent serfdom. Under it the workers will become a slave mind.

"If they are to be rescued from this danger they must be made to realize that they have capacities for something better and higher. The practice of sharing in the productive side of industrial management seems to be the most suitable means for beginning this task of rescue. And the labor union is the only agency capable of putting the means into operation."

The Rev. Charles Stelzle was Chairman of the service. He is a Presbyterian minister, a member of the machinsts' union, who founded the first Labor Sunday twenty years ago. After deducting the expenses of the meeting the collection was devoted to the relief fund of the striking British miners, a decision made by unanimous vote of the congregation, on a motion by the Rev. Herbert F. Laflamme, who offered the opening prayer.

The service was held under the joint auspices of the Greater New York Federation of Churches, the Federal Council of Churches and the Central Trades and Labor Council, which was represented by John Sullivan, President of the New York State Federation of Labor.

Green at Rand School Calls It Peril to All Society.

William N. Green, President of the American Federation of Labor, appeared yesterday before the convention of the Anti-Fascist Alliance of North America at the Rand School, 7 East Fifteenth Street, and pledged the support of his organization to the other. His appearance on the stage was the signal for a tumultuous demonstration from the delegates.

"In my official capacity as President of the American Federation of Labor," Mr. Green said, "I want to transmit to you my sympathetic understanding and to assure you that the A. F. of L. will stand with you and work with you until we have succeeded in driving Fascism from the face of the earth.

"I am deeply in sympathy with the Anti-Fascist movement. I should like to call it the movement for human freedom and human liberty. I frequently think of the working men of Italy, at the moment denied the freedom and liberty we enjoy in this country. I know that the Italian working men will not meekly submit to autocracy in any form but will carry on the struggle until they once again enjoy the blessings of liberty. As far as we can help them, our entire resources are placed at their command.

"Individuals are but the instrumentalities through which some cause can be promoted. Fascism stands for repression and denial of freedom and democracy and any movement which is seeking to deny the natural expression of the human race is an enemy to society. The American Federation of Labor has stood for freedom and democracy. It is the one movement in the land that stands as the defender of these principles, and it will be heard from wherever there is a movement to substitute autocracy for democracy. I have a profound regard for the Italian people and the highest admiration for the Italians who have come here to live with us."

Mr. Green said that the words of Abraham Lincoln, uttered during the struggle to abolish slavery, that this is a "government of the people, for the people, by the people" must be made to apply to the Governments of the entire world.

In introducing Mr. Green, Arthur Giovanniti, charged that foreign emissaries had been sent to the United States by Premier Mussolini to destroy the American labor movement as typified by the A. F. of L. He said they were "seeking to spread the poison of race prejudice" in this country and that the A. F. of L. was the "greatest labor movement in the world." He said the Anti-Fascist Alliance had representatives from all labor unions in its membership.

Morris Sigman, President of the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union, accompanied Mr. Green to the convention. He will speak at the session this afternoon. The convention will conclude with the evening session.

The session last night was devoted almost entirely to routine reports and discussions of administrative policy. For a short time the session became a stormy one when arguments arose among the Communist, Socialist and conservative groups. Quiet was restored when it was decided to name the Executive Committee of the alliance as a "steering committee" to harmonize the conflicting groups.

Heavy Furs Trim Fall Coats in Striking New Manner

A generous use of long-haired fur in deep shawl collars, stoles and full length lapels lend to the formal afternoon coat a feeling of luxury and elegance, which is further carried out in the ample bloused effect above the waist. A tight hip line and shaped shoulders are achieved in intricate geometric cuts.

HAIL MISS BARRETT AS A VICTOR TODAY

SHE IS DUE ON LEVIATHAN

Entertainment Here Planned Before She Goes Home to Pelham Manor —Parade From Pier Scheduled.

Miss Clare Belle Barrett, who came within two miles of the French coast in her attempt to swim the English Channel last month, will receive the welcome of a victor when she returns to America on the Leviathan at 11 o'clock this morning.

From the moment her ship touches the pier at the foot of West Forty-sixth Street until she goes home to Pelham Manor, N. Y., late at night, Miss Barrett will be the centre of a demonstration by her admirers. Mayor Benjamin B. Badeau of New Rochelle will head a delegation of 300 citizens of New Rochelle, the Pelhams and Larchmont, who will ride to the pier in gayly decorated automobiles. School children from the James Monroe High School, in the Bronx, where Miss Barrett teaches swimming, will also be present, waving flags and shouting a greeting.

A group of legionnaires from "Beau Geste," at the Criterion Theatre, will be in the procession which will escort Miss Barrett from the pier west to Eighth Avenue, north to Columbus Circle and then south on Broadway to Forty-fourth Street, where a luncheon will be given in her honor by John McGlynn, proprietor of the Forty-fourth Street Hotel. In the afternoon she will attend a matinee of "Beau Geste" at the Criterion Theatre, at which it is expected that she will tell of her experiences in the Channel swim.

Her mother, Mrs. Nathan Barrett, and members of the family will have dinner with Miss Barrett at the Forty-fourth Street Hotel in the evening, after which they will go to the performance of "Little Spitfire" at the Cort Theatre. From there Miss Barrett will go to Pelham Manor with her parents. She has already said she would rather sleep in her own bed in the little frame house there than in any hotel in the world.

Mother Praises Feat.

Mrs. Barrett admitted yesterday that her daughter deserved a rousing welcome for her effort in swimming the Channel. "She's entitled to every bit of it," said Mrs. Barrett. Miss Barrett remained in the cold Channel water for twenty-one and a half hours, and had swam forty miles when she had to give up, conquered by fog and adverse tides. At the time of her swim it was described as the finest performance ever put up by a woman in an attempt to swim the Channel.

Miss Barrett is now 32 years old. She was virtually unknown in professional swimming circles until last June, when she swam across Long Island Sound from New Rochelle to Sea Cliff—eleven miles—in ten and one-half hours. With her earnings as a swimming teacher she has supported herself and her mother and bought their little home at Pelham Manor, near the Sound shore.

Channel Match Nearer.

DEAL, England, Sept. 5 (AP).—A cross-Channel match between Gertrude Ederle and Mrs. Clemington Corson moved a step nearer realization today when the latter, through Trainer Billy Hellingsley, announced acceptance of a challenge for the meeting.

Mrs. Corson informed Mr. Hellingsley of her decision before leaving London yesterday for the United States, and reserved his services and those of Captain Harry Pearson, who skippered her boat in the recent Channel swim, for the forthcoming race. It is expected to be held next Summer over a course from England to France.

ATLANTIC CITY CROWDS WATCH 'TRUDY' SWIM

They Recognize Her at Once and Make It Hard for Her to Reach Water—She Visits Dempsey.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Sept. 5.—"Trudy" Ederle paid Atlantic City a flying visit today, "to take a dip in the ocean and get a look at Jack Dempsey." The famous woman swimmer with her manager, Dudley Field Malone, motored to the resort from Philadelphia and after "Trudy" had had her "look" and her "dip" motored back again.

The Channel swimmer was acclaimed by the Labor Day Sunday crowds which gathered wherever she was recognized. When she took her dip in front of the Ritz Carlton she had to fight her way to the surf through the thousands of bathers who had swarmed into the ocean at that point on hearing the rumor that "Trudy" was staying at the Ritz and was going to take a swim.

She did not stay in the water long. She pointed out beyond the breaker line and after churning up the water for fifteen minutes headed back to shore despite the request of the crowd to "go ahead and swim across; you can do it."

A northeast wind had been blowing up the coast for two days and the surf was rougher than it had been all season, but Miss Ederle said it was not as bad as the Channel.

CROWDS SHUN CONEY, JAM ATLANTIC CITY

Only 20,000 Visit Local Resort, Due to Rain, While 400,000 Go to New Jersey Shore.

AUTO TRAFFIC STILL HEAVY

Coney Island had only 20,000 visitors yesterday—the smallest Sunday crowd of the season—while Atlantic City reported it was playing host to the largest crowd in its history. Asbury Park also reported many visitors. Automobile highways in all directions carried heavy traffic to seaside and country resorts, but the traffic was not as heavy as on Friday and Saturday.

Railroad lines serving New York experienced a lull in holiday travel during the day. At the Grand Central Terminal operating officials said that not only was there a cessation of travel but a slump in the normal Sunday travel. Trains were arriving and departing with fewer passengers than on average Sundays.

The Hudson River Day Line boat from the Catskills landed comparatively few passengers at the West 129th Street pier last evening. Motor traffic by way of the Fort Lee Ferry at 129th Street and the West Shore ferries at the foot of West Forty-second Street had dwindled. The slump in rail, water and motor transportation was attributed to the chilly, wet weather.

Concessionaires at Coney Island did not try to disguise their disappointment when they opened their booths and other places of amusement in a heavy rain in the forenoon. The beach was practically deserted. Less than 200 persons went into the surf. Among them were the usual crop of Winter bathers who go swimming even if they have to break through ice.

Losses of the Coney Island establishments were described as "enormous" by Samuel W. Gumpertz, President of the Coney Island Board of Trade. Mr. Gumpertz said the business men of Coney Island had looked forward to the possibility of good weather over the Labor Day holidays and a volume of business which would help them to reduce the heaviest losses they have ever sustained. The concessionaires at Coney Island are hoping for a day of sunshine and balmy weather today. They figure that it will not be too late to recoup their losses if they get fair weather for the rest of the week.

They are endeavoring to attract visitors to Coney Island by an elaborate fireworks display nightly until Sept. 13, and after that they count upon Mardi Gras to bring visitors from Sept. 13 to 19.

Atlantic City Crowded.

Dull skies had no effect upon the Boardwalk at Atlantic City, according to reports from that resort. The crowds were so large that they gave scant attention to a large number of celebrities who went there to spend the Labor Day holidays. Among them were Gertrude Ederle, first woman to swim the English Channel, and Jack Dempsey, heavyweight champion. The Atlantic City crowds were estimated at more than 400,000.

Asbury Park reported that its Boardwalk was carrying a capacity crowd and reports of enormous crowds all along the New Jersey coast came from Bradley Beach, Belmar and Spring Lake.

More than 6,000 motor cars used the Bear Mountain-Peekskill Bridge in the twenty-four-hour period ending yesterday morning at 10 o'clock, according to Superintendent Charles Floom, who said it was the largest Saturday traffic since the bridge was opened. Bridge traffic was slowed up yesterday on account of the rain, but is expected to come in full force tonight when the rush home begins.

AWARD TO WORKER'S WIDOW

She Gets $23 a Week for Life as Result of Husband's Death.

Special to The New York Times.

GOSHEN, N. Y., Sept. 5.—Because George Reynolds, an electrician, was killed at his employment by falling from the roof of a building, an award of $23.07 a week for life has been made to his widow, Mrs. Mary Reynolds, of Middletown, under the State Workmen's Compensation Insurance laws. If Mrs. Reynolds lives the average life span of a woman the award will amount to about $25,000 for her lifetime.

In addition she has received a separate award for four children until they become of age. Mrs. Reynolds received the award from Referee J. S. Whipple.

FEWER SURPLUS CARS.

Freight Carriers Available Aug. 22 Dropped to 168,854.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 5.—Surplus freight cars in good repair and immediately available for service on Aug. 22 numbered 168,854 on Class 1 railroads, according to figures given out today by the American Railway Association. This is a decrease of 2,385 cars compared with Aug. 14.

Surplus coal cars in good repair on Aug. 22 totaled 38,813, a decrease of 1,887 within approximately a week, while surplus box cars totaled 96,948, a decrease of 246.

Reports also showed 16,279 surplus stock cars, a decrease of 880 from Aug. 14, while surplus refrigerator cars totaled 10,848, an increase of 610. No car shortage is reported.

OLDEST IN CITY HOME CELEBRATES AT 100

SEVEN PRESENT PAST 80

Guest of Honor, Born in Scotland, Came to America in 1871—Held Position Until She Was 84.

Despite the lowering skies yesterday afternoon, the City Home on Welfare Island was filled with an atmosphere of cheer in celebration of the 100th birthday of Mrs. Jane Wilson, oldest resident of the institution. Sole survivor of a large circle of relatives and friends of a generation ago, Mrs. Wilson reached the century mark surrounded by new friends who gathered in the ward of the home to celebrate the event with birthday cakes, ice cream, music and good wishes. The party was arranged by Miss Elizabeth Justus, assisted by other members of the Golden Rule Club of the Young Women's Christian Association, of which she is President. Miss Justus some eight years ago "adopted" Mrs. Wilson, in accordance with the custom of the Friendly Adoption Society, an organization founded by Miss S. J. Manahan, a representative of the City Mission Society.

Mrs. Wilson's cheery disposition and alert mind have won her many friends since she was admitted to the City Home in June, 1917. The St. Andrew's Society has also adopted her.

Asked about her early life, Mrs. Wilson said she was born Sept. 7, 1826, in Wigtown, Scotland. "My father, Thomas Douglas," she said, "was a prosperous shoemaker, but with the importation of machine-made American shoes he had to give up his trade. I was married to Samuel Wilson, a gardener, in 1849. When he died, twenty-two years later, I came to America on the steamer Circassian to join my sister, Mrs. Charles Mitchell, who lived in Forty-fourth Street. I brought with me £180 from the sale of my home in Scotland. For many years afterward I was a domestic servant. My last situation was in Florida, which I had to give up sixteen years ago, when I was 84 years old."

Seven of the 100 inmates of the City Home who attended the birthday party yesterday were between 80 and 90 years old. Among the members of the staff present was the Rev. Sydney N. Usher, Episcopal chaplain at Welfare Island, who first brought Mrs. Wilson to the attention of Miss Justus.

ATTENDANT DIES IN LIBRARY

Thomas Kilgallor, 66 years old, of 85 Washington Avenue, New Rochelle, an attendant at the Public Library, Fifth Avenue and Forty-second Street, dropped dead at his post yesterday afternoon. Heart disease was said to have been the cause.

The sudden death of the attendant, whose duty it was to watch the Fifth Avenue entrance, caused little commotion as few persons were passing at the time, and rain had kept the library crowd small.

According to fellow attendants, Kilgallor came to work showing no signs of illness. At five o'clock he seemed to be taken by a shiver and fell over. Dr. Ward, who came from New York Hospital, pronounced him dead. A brother, John, also of New Rochelle, was notified.

DOVER, Sept. 5.—Lieut. Col. Bernard C. Freyberg, V. C., made a third attempt to swim the English Channel today, but unfavorable weather forced him to abandon it when still some miles from the English coast.

Starting from Cape Gris Nez at 7:17 o'clock this morning, he remained in the water under trying and disagreeable conditions for eight and three-quarters hours. Then the heavy sea stirred up by a strong wind forced him to quit.

BRITAIN'S BIRTH RATE FALLS

LONDON, Sept. 5 (AP).—A record drop in the birth rate for England and Wales is revealed by the figures for the second quarter of the current year. The Registrator General's quarterly return shows fewer babies in proportion to the population were born in this period than for any previous second quarter, except for the war-disturbed years 1917-19.

There were 181,455 births, or 5,519 below the corresponding quarter last year. The actual birth rate was 18.7 per 1,000.

Marshals Not at Celebration.

MEAUX, France, Sept. 5 (AP).—Civilians predominated today in the celebration of the twelfth anniversary of the Battle of the Marne. Ministers Painlevé, Tardieu and Marin made addresses to an immense concourse of spectators. Marshals Foch, Petain, Fayolle and Franchet Desperay all were represented by aids, but Marshal Joffre, hailed a dozen years ago as "victor of the Marne," was not even represented by proxy. Colonel Bayley Mott attended on behalf of the United States.

JEWS HAIL NEW YEAR WEDNESDAY EVENING

FIRST OF THE HOLY DAYS

Yom Kippur, or Day of Atonement, Comes on Sept. 18—Succoth, or Feast of Tabernacles, Sept. 23.

With the sinking of the sun Wednesday the Jewish year 5687 will be ushered in by the almost 1,500,000 Jews—orthodox and reform—in the five boroughs of New York. Virtually all will go to their respective synagogues or improvised halls of worship to celebrate the beginning of Rosh ha-Shanah, the Jewish New Year.

The new year will be heralded by the blowing of the shofar, or ram's horn, here, as in every place of Hebrew worship, at sundown in all parts of the world.

Wednesday evening will mark the first of a series of three annual Jewish observances. Yom Kippur, or the Day of Atonement, which is the holiest day in the Jewish calendar, comes on Saturday, Sept. 18. It will be ushered in on the preceding Friday evening with a solemn service which is generally known as Kol Nidre. A prominent feature is the memorial service held in commemoration of the dead.

Succoth, or the Feast of Tabernacles, comes on Thursday, Sept. 23, and the festival lasts eight days. Succoth is a harvest festival, and scripturally it is known as the "Feast of Ingathering." Historically it is associated with the journey of the Israelites through the wilderness.

The Union of Orthodox Jewish congregations of America has this year produced a new form of collapsible succah. This can be erected within an hour for family services. These can be obtained at the office of the union, 131 West Eighty-sixth Street.

Rosh ha-Shanah will be observed by Orthodox Jews until sundown Friday, and by Reform Jews until Thursday at sunset. Many Jewish business houses will remain closed.

Dwight F. Davis, Secretary of War, has authorized furloughs for Jewish soldiers from noon tomorrow to noon Sept. 12, and from the evening of Sept. 16 to noon of Sept. 20, to enable them to participate in the observance of their holy days.

The Young Men's Hebrew Association, Lexington Avenue and Ninety-second Street, has arranged services for the men of the army and navy who will be unable to reach their homes for the holidays.

In response to a circular issued by Postmaster John J. Kiely asking that New Year cards be mailed before today, many thousands have been posted. The request was made because many postoffice employes are of Jewish faith and desire to observe their holidays and also to prevent delay and congestion of the mails.

All rabbis who have been in Europe or at a distance in this country have either returned or are rushing home to officiate at the holy day services.

The Free Synagogue will conduct holy day services this year at the Free Synagogue House, 40 West Sixty-eighth Street, in addition to the regular services in Carnegie Hall, conducted by Dr. Stephen S. Wise. The Synagogue House services will be in the nature of overflow meetings. There will be no registration fee or charge for seats. Admittance will be by ticket, which can be obtained only by applying in person at the executive office of the Free Synagogue in the Synagogue House.

The services will be conducted in cooperation with the Jewish Institute of Religion and also in cooperation with the Men's Club of the Synagogue.

INDIAN BEAUTY IN PAGEANT.

Girl of Chelane Tribe, Going to Atlantic City—Entrants Protested.

Jessie Jim, a full-blood Chelane Indian, who was chosen at the Northwest Indian Congress at Spokane, Wash., last July as the most beautiful girl among the thirty-five tribes at the congress, will go to Atlantic City tonight to take part in a pageant there. She will be the guest of Mayor Edward L. Bader of Atlantic City until Sept. 11, when she will return to her tribe.

Miss Jim, who is the only daughter of Long Jim, chief of the Chelane Indians, will appear in the pageant as Princess America II. She is accompanied by Mrs. Sarah Truax Albert of Spokane.

ATLANTIC CITY, Sept. 5.—The right of two entrants to be in the beauty contest here as representatives of their respective cities is being disputed. In Pittsburgh a great cry has been been raised as to what right Miss Thelma Williams has to claim the designation "Miss Pittsburgh." At Elizabeth, N. J., a protest has been filed that the girl selected as "Miss Elizabeth" does not live in Elizabeth. Those protesting against the selection of Miss Williams as "Miss Pittsburgh" say she is not a resident of Pittsburgh, but of Center County, Pa. No attention will be paid to the protests, the management of the contest said.

TENNIS WEEK at NEWPORT

This is the costume designed by Chanel and first presented by Saks-Fifth Avenue. Miss Van A's version of the fashion was particularly smart, carried out in the new two tones of blue — the skirt and vestee were of navy blue crepella and the striped cardigan sweater of French blue bound to match the frock.

Her hat of stitched navy blue velvet had the narrow flexible brim. Natural lizard skin shoes reflected Fall smartness as did her matching bag of extremely clever designs.

EXPLORER SAT ON JACOB'S WELL

Bishop Dubose Gives Further Details of Discoveries at Ancient City of Shechem.

SAYS JERICHO'S WALLS FELL

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 5 (AP).—Further details of his discoveries on the site of the ancient City of Shechem of biblical history and of his explorations in Palestine were related yesterday by Bishop H. M. Dubose, President of the three Tennessee annual conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, who has returned from the Holy Land.

Bishop Dubose and a party of German college professors led an archaeological trip in recent excavations in Palestine and Egypt, which were begun about the time of the outbreak of the World War and soon will be completed.

Proof was established, the Bishop asserted, of the historic city of Jacob. It was discovered, he declared, that the foundations of Shechem were 4,000 years old.

The rounded curb of the well where Christ is recorded in the Bible as having sat and talked with the woman of Samaria is still intact. The Bishop sat upon it and drank the water, which he described as of a sweetish taste.

The walls of the city of Shechem measured almost three miles in line, he said.

The Bishop displayed photographs of the unearthed ruins of the foundations of a colonade palace within the walls of the city.

"This bears out the Bible," he said. "Not a relic of any sort was discovered in the palace by the excavators. The Bible says that the sons of Jacob destroyed Shechem in the seventeenth century B. C., that the palace was stripped bare, and the ruins were found as such. Jacob, Biblical history says, soon evacuated out of fear and the people returned and rebuilt."

On the site of the ancient walls of Jericho, which the Bible records fell upon the sounding of the ram's horn by a priest in the time of Joshua, in the fourteenth century, B. C., Bishop Dubose declared the fact that the walls fell was indisputable. This he asserted, was determined by the examination of pottery, which fixed the age, and the examination of the fragments.

Tablets fruitful of "wonderful results" were unearthed in Shechem.

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 5.—Representative Juan Verdin and two of his friends were assassinated by political enemies, according to dispatches from the State of Nayarit.

The police so far have found no trace of the murderers.

Guardalajara, the second largest city in the republic, is great excited over the killing of a Congressman in the streets there last week by political enemies. Feeling is running high and the elections for Governor of the State of Jalisco next Sunday are expected to produce riots.

Federal troops have been warned to be on the alert to prevent disorders.

GUARD QUEENS POSTOFFICES

Police Get Tip From Washington That Robbery Is Planned.

Every postoffice and postal substation in Queens is under police guard, it was learned last night. Postal authorities at Washington, it was said, asked for police protection for the postoffices on a tip that a robbery had been planned at some place in Queens County over the week-end.

As soon as the postoffices were closed Saturday night, uniformed policemen and detectives were assigned to watch the buildings. The guards are to be kept on duty until Tuesday morning, when the full staff of employes will be at work again.

Acting Captain John Gallagher is in charge of the protection of postoffices on the north side of Queens. The south side is covered by Acting Captain Herbert Graham.

as the latter craft drew near to them were a most welcome sight.

The policemen succeeded after some work in getting the stalled engine of the motor boat to start again. The Commissioner laughed off the profuse thanks of the young men and, plunging overboard, started to swim ashore, while the motor boat went off in company with the police launch.

Mr. McLaughlin, who is a strong swimmer, reached the shore without difficulty and turned to watch the departing boats. While he looked, the engine of the motor boat again sputtered and stopped and he saw that the police launch had taken it in tow. Then he took a last look at the weather and went indoors.

Whe reporters later sought to question the Commissioner about his adventure, he modestly refused to discuss it. Any information about the rescued men he said ist come through the regular police channels.

The motorboat, which was a forty-four footer, the K-16942, was towed to the yacht landing at Gravesend Bay, where its occupants were very glad to get ashore. The one who said he was the owner gave his name as Richard Neill and his address as 173 Dewey Avenue, Paterson, N. J. The three others said they were William R. Brownel of 312 Pacific Street, Paterson; William Lample of 928 Madison Avenue, Paterson, and William Young of New York Avenue, Jersey City Heights.

General Ian Hamilton Says We Were the Only Nation to Benefit.

LONDON Sept. 5.—That possibly the United States was the only nation to benefit from the World War was a statement made by General Sir Ian Hamilton in a speech at Glasgow today.

"The speaker," he said, "feels himself tempted to pander to popular belief that the blood of a vast multitude of war victims has not been sacrificed in vain. But the hour at last has struck when we must wrench our thoughts away from romance and sympathy to face the fact that there still is no sign either from heaven or in our hearts that these rivers of blood have purchased any atom of good to any one except possibly the Americans.

"The whole of stored-up capital left us by our forefathers has found its way into the pockets of the nation which financed the bloodshed, yet that nation is no happier in conscience."

SURPRISED TO LEARN FRAWLEY HAD A SON

HERE ONLY FOR FUNERAL

Young Man Declares He Has No Thought of Sharing Estate—Services Tomorrow.

Nathan Burkan, attorney, for many years a close friend of the late James J. Frawley, who died from a heart attack last Wednesday while on vacation at Dixville Notch, N. H., said yesterday that he never had heard that Mr. Frawley had a 23-year-old son by a former marriage. He added that young Mr. Frawley's right to share in the Frawley estate would await reading of the will after the funeral tomorrow.

Young Mr. Frawley arrived in this city from Pittsburgh on Saturday to attend the funeral. The fact that the late Senator had been divorced in 1905 in South Dakota by Mrs. Miriam Morris Frawley was recorded in the newspapers at that time. The dispatches from South Dakota reported that under the decree custody of their child had been awarded to Mrs. Frawley, the father having the privilege of seeing the child once a week.

The late Senator was married in December, 1906, to Miss Jillian Gannon of this city by the Rev. Father Joseph L. Hoey in the Roman Catholic Church of St. Francis de Sales. The wedding was kept secret for almost two months.

Mr. Burkan was designated as the person to see, when inquiries were made at the Frawley home, 180 East Ninety-fifth Street.

"I never heard of a son," he said. "I don't know the situation The late Senator never mentioned the son to me, although I had been very close to him for many years. I do not think the Senator's sisters and other relatives knew of the son, but I don't know this positively. The first I knew of the son was when I read it in the newspaper this morning."

Mr. Burkan was asked whether Mr. Frawley had left a will. He said he did not know, adding that no search had been made for one, nor would a search be made until the services had been held.

Young Mr. Frawley was found at his hotel. He does not use that name. He is registered under the name of his stepfather, his mother having remarried.

"The question of sharing in the estate," he said, "has never entered my head. I came here merely out of respect to my father and to attend his funeral. As for the family not knowing about me, they do know about me. I expect to return to Pittsburgh immediately after the service. My mother will attend the service, I think."

20 DEAD AS TRAIN PLUNGES INTO RIVER

Their husbands are engaged in celery raising at Avon, about fifty miles west of here. The men had placed their wives on the train and had driven to Buena Vista by automobile. They were waiting at the station at Buena Vista for the delayed train to arrive when they got word of the wreck.

Relief Trains Speed to the Scene.

News of the wreck was immediately flashed here and to Salida, which is a division headquarters and about twenty-five miles south of the scene. Relief trains with doctors and nurses were immediately dispatched from both points.

When the first party of rescue workers arrived they found that the injured who were able were pulling themselves from the wreckage and out of the river bed, while the uninjured passengers were using every effort to reach those in the overturned cars.

First word of the wreck, one of the worst in the history of the Denver & Rio Grande Western, was flashed to Granite, with a plea for assistance, by a sheep herder, who heard the crash from a distance, where he was watching his flock. His call brought all available persons to the scene from Granite and Leadville, thirteen miles to the east.

Runs Off Tracks at Curve.

Dr. G. W. Larimer, surgeon of the Red Cross Hospital at Salida, who was motoring to Leadville, was among the first to reach the scene. He hastily organized the rescue work and provided emergency treatment for the more seriously injured.

According to some passengers, the train, drawn by one of the new 1,600 locomotives, the largest type used in the United States today, was running forty minutes behind schedule and on a down grade when the huge engine left the rails on a sharp curve and plowed into the bed of the river.

The baggage coach followed the engine and tender, alighting on top of the latter, while the two day coaches and two Pullman cars turned on their sides and were partly telescoped. One of them was so turned around that it formed a bridge across the stream. More than 150 feet of track was torn up.

The train consisted of nine Pullmans, two diners, two day coaches and a baggage car and carried 272 passengers in addition to the train crew. The engine was being piloted by G. M. Lillis, traveling engineer, who had taken the throttle only a few minutes before from Engineer Harold Harpending. Both were killed.

Acetylene Torches Used On Cars.

The greatest number of dead were found in the second coach, which was badly telescoped despite its steel construction. In one end of this car four women were killed. Their bodies were not recovered and the rescue crews hastily began working on the coach with acetylene torches.

The bodies of two women and four children were found a short distance downstream from the wrecked cars.

Rescuers came upon one woman who was hopelessly pinned beneath the side of one of the steel coaches. To liberate her they found it necessary to amputate her leg. She died soon afterward from shock and loss of blood.

The river at the point where the train jumped into the river bed is fifty feet wide. The right of way lies along the upper reaches of the Royal Gorge, about three miles from the scene of the wreck of the Denver & Rio Grande Western Panoramic Special last year, which took two lives.

Survivors and the less seriously injured huddled about bonfires to thaw out after their plunge into the cold water, and those who were able were placed aboard a relief train and started for hospitals at Salida and Denver.

Early tonight those engaged in rescue work expressed the opinion that from ten to twenty additional bodies were still in the wrecked coaches and in the river. Before 5 o'clock in the afternoon, seven bodies had been taken to the morgue at Leadville and two to Salida.

S. J. Pyeatt, President of the railroad, left Denver early in the afternoon for the scene of the wreck and before leaving announced that a thorough and exhaustive investigation would be made to learn the cause of the disaster.

HIDES FOUR DAYS ON LINER.

Stowaway Lives on Cheese and Hard Tack—Will Be Deported.

When the Scandinavian-American liner Frederik VIII arrived yesterday from Copenhagen, the purser reported a stowaway on board, who came on deck four days out from the Norwegian port and gave himself up to Captain F. Macklinburg, master of the ship.

The stowaway said he was 20 years old and gave his name as William Mathiasen of Oslo. He had subsisted on green cheese, with caraway seeds, hard tack and a gallon jar of water. He told the immigration authorities that he had come here three years ago on a Shipping Board boat as a stowaway and had been deported. They told him that the same thing would happen again.

Mathiasen will be held on the liner until Tuesday and then sent to Ellis Island.

Newport Mail Steamer Answers Signals Near Block Island.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sept. 5 (AP).—The 40-foot power cruiser Vandy of Providence, with ten persons aboard, wallowing in heavy seas off Sandy Point Buoy, Block Island, and flying distress signals, was sighted at 1:30 o'clock this afternoon by the steamer New Shoreham on her Newport-Block Island passage.

Captain Charles Fuller of the Shoreham went off his course to go to her rescue. Two lines were cast on board. Both parted under strain. A third line held. The Vandy was towed into New Harbor, Block Island, to safe anchorage. More than one hundred and twenty-five passengers and the mails were delayed an hour and a half.

A Message To The Women Who Love Fine Furs And Wish To Own Them

Episodes in the History of One of New York's Leading Fur Institutions

Explaining why more than half of SELBERT'S Business comes from the Recommendations of Pleased Patrons

SELBERT combines the choicest selection of pelts, the most expert fur workmanship, and the smartest models in the widest possible varieties.

SELBERT offers all these at a far smaller profit than most houses can afford to consider.

SELBERT is content with a small, single-profit policy to which each individual customer need contribute but a trifle and which the immense volume of business multiplies.

SELBERT lessens the final cost of your furs by keeping them in perfect condition and repair for you after purchase.

SELBERT bases both its own purchasing and manufacturing upon many years of undivided attention to and experience in furs.

SELBERT operates its own fur factory and controls the entire output of two other factories.

SELBERT combs the markets of two continents for smart fur novelties and the newest trends in fur fashions.

SELBERT brings you Paris fashions without a Paris price, an ocean voyage or a customs accounting for you.

SELBERT maintains Paris headquarters and Fifth Avenue service at a mere fraction of their usual cost to you.

SELBERT backs the known integrity of its word with the actual bond of the Fidelity and Casualty Company of New York, one of America's pioneer bonding companies, with assets of more than $32,000,000.

SELBERT thus guarantees the low price, the high quality and the reasonable wear of all the furs it sells.

SELBERT declares its policy to be the lowest possible price for fine quality and supports this declaration by a guarantee to refund the difference if any customer should ever be able to find an equal value at a lower price.

SELBERT assures the same courteous treatment to the cony customer as to the mink customer.

SELBERT takes as great an interest and as much time and pains to satisfy the buyer of the least expensive as of the most expensive furs, both in selection and in any wanted alteration.

SELBERT tries to give the woman with the least money to spend the very most it will obtain, so that later on, if she CAN buy sables, they will be SELBERT sables.

SELBERT endeavors to have every woman, whether she buys a coat or not, leave with a smile, remember the institution with pleasure, and feel free to return as often as she wishes to see the new, always-incoming fur fashions.

SELBERT realizes that buying furs means a considerable outlay of money and that the woman not acquainted with the principles of this organization is especially entitled to look elsewhere for comparison.

SELBERT urges no customer unduly to buy, but is content to let the furs speak for themselves in value, quality and fashion.

SELBERT invites every woman who is considering buying furs—or who would like a fur coat in the future—to come in and look around, without obligation, without explanation, without argument.

SELBERT, with pardonable pride, calls attention to its unparalleled fur service during the past season:

Free summer storage for all SELBERT furs.
Free cleaning, repairs, reconditioning, reglazing.

SELBERT publishes the newest, most entertaining and best book on furs, THE FUR BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE, a bound book of 96 pages, written by Anna Bird Stewart, illustrated by Greta Frank.

SELBERT gives this book free to all who write or call for it, so that women may become better acquainted with the furs they buy and be less often tricked by unscrupulous but ever-flourishing fur sharks.

SELBERT warns all women against privately offered "fur bargains" by persons unknown to them, against so-called "smuggled furs" and fly-by-night fur concerns with sledge-hammer tactics of salesmanship and covert misrepresentations.

SELBERT admits that only a mere quarter of its business comes from its extensive newspaper advertising, the other three-quarters coming from its pleased and satisfied customers.

SELBERT pledges the faith of the firm and the word of its individual members on the high principles that underlie the institution, and their loyalty to an ideal of the finer furs brought within the reach of every woman.

DRY AGENTS DESCEND ON CHARLESTON, S. C.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Sept. 5 (AP).—In a series of raids directed by M. Q. Dunning, Prohibition Coordinator for the Southeast, one hundred Federal prohibition officers from four States at 6 o'clock tonight had arrested twenty-five persons, including Federal, State and county officers, and were continuing the drive.

Preparations for the raid have been under way for weeks, Coordinator Dunning made known today. "Undercover" men, one of them G. D. McKnight, former "king of the rum-runners" in Berkeley and Charleston Counties, have been working for some time gathering evidence against officials.

Mr. Dunning began gathering his forces at Savannah last Thursday. Thirty Federal agents on Saturday morning boarded the Coast Guard cutter Yamacraw. Others started overland for Charleston. Arriving in Charleston Harbor late yesterday, all of the agents on board the Yamacraw were kept below decks. When the ship docked the agents left in groups of two or three, each under a leader who had typewritten instructions as to what his group should do. Warrants had been issued in advance and these were placed in the hands of Deputy United States Marshals.

Preparations for the raids were so secret that B. C. Sharpe, prohibition administrator for Georgia and the Carolinas, did not know of the plans.

Mr. Dunning characterized the raids as "his answer to Mr. Sharpe," who recently issued a statement criticizing prohibition enforcement in his district.

The officers arrested, among others, Alonzo B. Seabrook, Federal prohibition agent, who is accused of conspiracy and bribery; H. S. Gamble, Sheriff of Williamsburg County, charged with conspiracy to receive bribes, and George C. H. Ham of Florence, a State constable, on charges of accepting bribes.

The prisoners were lodged in the "brig" of the Coast Guard cutter Yamacraw. The raids continued throughout the day.

Seabrook was arrested at his home by Deputy United States Marshal C. H. Schultz. Officers assert they found fourteen and a half gallons of moonshine whisky in his house and $1,155 in bills, of which $390 was marked money alleged to have been given to Seabrook by "planted" rum runners under Dunning's direction. Seabrook was among those taken aboard the Yamacraw and placed under guard for the night.

Coordinator Dunning gave out a statement today reviewing his investigation here before the raid, describing the employment of McKnight and the cooperation given by officials, and concluding:

"The result of this campaign discloses a situation, which, while seemingly shocking, is not out of the ordinary to any individual who is familiar with the operations of the whisky ring and in localities where corrupt officials happen to get into office.

"I believe that the work done in this section will do much to convince not only the agents who are employed by the Government but all others that it pays to stay straight. And I further believe that much good has been accomplished by the success that has crowned the efforts of those who have been planning the ways and means toward bringing about enforcement of the prohibition law.

"Fourteen stills and thousands of gallons of mash and whisky were seized and destroyed."

French Father Ends His Life As Daughters Bob Tresses

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Sept. 5.—It was the proud boast of Charles Serlandie, a prosperous shopkeeper of the Paris suburbs, that his two young daughters had the most beautiful long hair for miles around. He casually told them that were their golden tresses to fall victim to the prevailing mode he would kill himself.

The girls, however, did not take their father seriously and yesterday appeared with the latest boyish bob. A few hours later M. Serlandie fired a bullet through his heart and died instantly.

RUM PLOT SUSPECTED AS CAUSE OF SUICIDE

Authorities Believe Search for Snedecor Death Cause Will Reveal Ring's Activities.

Special to The New York Times.

BAY SHORE, L. I., Sept. 5.—Secrets of one of Long Island's powerful rum-running rings may be brought to light in the investigation into the suicide of Raymond Snedecor of Bay Shore, whose body was found Friday night. District Attorney George A. Hildreth of Suffolk County conferred with the State troopers here today and plans to attend the inquest on Snedecor's body next Tuesday.

The authorities say they have evidence that Snedecor had become implicated in the activities of a ring of bootleggers, headed by Captain Edgar Reybert, who is alleged to have been actively engaged in rum running. Fred Snedecor, a brother of the dead man, bitterly denounced Reybert today for involving his brother in his business and also for his alleged attention to Raymond Snedecor's young and attractive wife. Both of these factors, it is alleged, caused Snedecor to take his life. Reybert has been missing since the discovery of Snedecor's body and State troopers are trying to trace him.

Mrs. Raymond Snedecor walked into Police Headquarters today to ask for the key to her home, which troopers investigating the case took with them on Friday night. She, like Reybert, had been missing since the body was found.

She explained to Sergeant Chris Kemmler at the desk that she had gone to New York on Thursday to see a physician about a weak ankle, and that she had stayed in the city overnight. Her first knowledge of the suicide was given to her by a friend, she said.

Funeral services for Snedecor will be held tomorrow evening at the home of the dead man's mother, Mrs. John Snedecor, in Bay Shore, with interment in Oakwood Cemetery Tuesday morning. Members of the local American Legion post of which Snedecor was a member, will conduct services at the cemetery and will fire a volley over his grave.

RUM RAIDS IN ATLANTIC CITY

Agents Enter Six Cafes—Hotel In Wildwood Invaded.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Sept. 5.—Federal prohibition agents spent a busy week-end here. Under Agent Barcus they raided seven cafés, six in this city and one in Wildwood.

At Ocean City the raiders saw two cars collide. They became suspicious and an investigation disclosed three pints of liquor in a car owned by George C. Reed, 5,521 North Fifth Street, Philadelphia. While he protested that it was for his own consumption, Reed, together with Richard E. Reeden and John F. Good, also of Philadelphia, were held under $500 bail each for a Federal hearing.

The places raided here included the Union Café, the Allegan Hotel, the Boulevard Inn, the Saraman, the Alabam Café and a saloon at Arkansas and Atlantic Avenues. Liquor was seized in nearly every case and arrests made. For the second time within a month the Hotel Brighton, Wildwood, was raided. Three arrests were made there and liquor seized.

WON'T RECONSIDER, SAYS MGR. CHIDWICK

MAY RETURN AFTER WHILE

Senator Means Says Resignation Is Due to False Stories Spread by Political Enemies.

Mgr. John P. Chidwick, chaplain of the battleship Maine when it was blown up in 1898, declined yesterday to reconsider his resignation from the United Spanish War Veterans, but absolved the New York veterans of any blame in connection with the election of Senator Rice W. Means of Colorado, said to be a member of the Ku Klux Klan, as National Commander at the convention in Des Moines last month.

In a letter to James J. Delaney, State Commander of the Spanish War Veterans, Mgr. Chidwick explained his stand as follows:

"While I do regret the publicity given to my resignation, I do sincerely regret the interpretation which has been placed upon it. After close consideration I cannot and do not wish to blame the Department of New York for the condition which has arisen and compelled me to my sorrow to resign from the United Spanish War Veterans.

"I am positive that this condition is regretted by the department officers as well as by myself. I hope and feel confident that our department officers will safeguard the ideals of liberty and justice as our department has always done. I wish for them success in their administration. May God guide the United Spanish War Veterans in their effort, in union with all true-minded citizens of our country—to have our nation stand for the ideals of our forefathers."

Mgr. Chidwick's resignation, which startled the local Spanish War Veterans on Saturday, was a protest, it was learned yesterday, against Senator Means's attitude toward the Catholic Church in Colorado, the Bishop of which is a close friend of the Monsignor. The Senator was elected in 1924 with the open support of the Ku Klux Klan, and it is said to have developed later that he himself belonged to the hooded order.

Officers of the New York Department of the Spanish War Veterans said they did not know at the time of the Des Moines convention that Senator Means was affiliated with the Klan. Mr. Delaney, Department Commander, and Walter V. McCoy, his Chief of Staff, both of whom are Catholics, said yesterday that if they had known this fact Senator Means would not have received the support of the New York delegation. Both men denied that the resignation of Mgr. Chidwick indicated any rift or dissension among the local Spanish War Veterans.

They visited Mgr. Chidwick yesterday afternoon to ascertain his views and to induce him, if possible, to reconsider his resignation. The Monsignor told them, they said, that he did not wish any other Spanish War veterans to resign because of the Klan issue. He assured them, according to Mr. Delaney, that he would return to membership as soon as a new administration, not so "offensive to Catholics," was installed.

Special to The New York Times.

DENVER, Col., Sept. 5.—"The resignation of Mgr. John P. Chidwick as department chaplain of the State of New York of the United Spanish War Veterans, and his withdrawal from the veterans' organization is the result of efforts of certain Denver persons to harm me in my campaign for election to the United States Senate," said Senator Rice W. Means tonight.

"False charges have been made against me solely by political propagandists. Inasmuch as I am now in the midst of my campaign I do not wish to make a statement in answer to these false charges."

COOLIDGE WEARS OUT ADIRONDACK GUIDES

Special to The New York Times.

PAUL SMITH'S, N. Y., Sept. 5.—President Coolidge has gained great benefits in health from his nine weeks in the Adirondacks. His physician reports that he has not had a touch of rose fever, to which he is subject, and that he has reduced his weight to 153 pounds.

The President has exercised actively every day, either fishing or hiking in the woods. His endurance has been the marvel and envy of veteran woodsmen.

When he fished Ausable River a few days ago, he set out with his guides, Ormand Doty and Oscar Otis, at 5 o'clock in the morning after a light breakfast. He waded the middle of the stream for miles, tramped through the woods in his heavy wading boots, stumbled through underbrush and under and over logs and several times fell prone, as did both of the guides. Each time he was up and on without assistance, seemingly never winded.

He refused to pause for lunch and got back to White Pine Camp at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. One of the guides was so exhausted he took to his bed and the other decided to "call it a day."

After loitering about a little while and satisfying himself that Mrs. Coolidge was not annoyed by his failure to appear for lunch, the President called his car and drove to the Executive Office for the slated conference with the newspaper correspondents. In an hour he was back at the camp and proposing to fish again till dark. He called for his guides in vain. They were all in. So he went without them.

RICHMOND'S SESQUI OBSERVED INDOORS

WAR VETERANS ATTEND

Other Patriotic Organizations Take Part in Program—15,000 Will Parade Today.

Although the rain yesterday prevented the holding of services out of doors, as had been planned, special exercises in honor of its sesquicentennial were held in churches of all denominations throughout Staten Island. This was the third day of Staten Island's nine-day celebration.

At the Reformed Church in Port Richmond, whose minister is the Rev. Otto L. F. Mohn, a combined service was held with the congregation of Temple Emanuel of West New Brighton, led by Rabbi I. A. Milner. This was the first time in Staten Island's history, it was said, that Jews and Christians had united in a service. The Reformed Church was founded in 1699 as the Dutch Reformed Church. Its establishment was commemorated yesterday.

The Rev. Oscar F. Moore, rector of St. Andrew's Episcopal Church of Richmond, spoke of the sesquicentennial from his pulpit. This church was founded in 1702 and numbers among its congregation many descendants of ancient Huguenot families.

At St. Peter's Roman Catholic Church in New Brighton, Mgr. Charles A. Cassidy spoke of American independence and the sesquicentennial. The priests in the other Catholic churches throughout the island also preached on the celebration.

The congregations were augmented yesterday by large delegations from patriotic organizations. These included the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Spanish War Veterans and a few members of the Grand Army of the Republic.

At 2:30 o'clock this afternoon 15,000 members of fraternal, patriotic and civic organizations will parade from Port Richmond to the Borough Hall in St. George. Edwin Markham will read a poem composed for the occasion and Representative Annin S. Prall will speak.

DENIES GIRL'S CHARGES AGAINST TWO OFFICERS

Nassau Detective Captain Says Accusations of Advances Lack Basis—Perjury to Be Sought.

HEMPSTEAD, L. I., Sept. 5.—The charges made by Emma Krause, a 15-year-old girl of Elmont, L. I., against County Detective Harry Wright and J. S. Healy, an Elmont truant officer, are entirely unfounded, Captain Harold R. King of the Nassau County Detective Bureau declared today.

"I have made a pretty thorough investigation of the girl's statements, accusing Detective Wright and Healy," said Captain King, "and I feel that the charges are unjustified."

The girl on Friday in a habeas corpus proceeding brought before Supreme Court Justice Dunne sought to be released from the Home for Young Girls in Brooklyn and in doing so charged that she had been railroaded into the home and that Wright and Healy had made advances to her prior to her commitment to the home.

County Judge Lewis J. Smith said here yesterday that he would send for the papers in the case and that he would make a thorough investigation to determine whether perjurous testimony had been given in behalf of the girl. He added that if there was perjury in the case, the facts would be presented to the Grand Jury.

BRITONS TO VISIT YALE.

English Medical Students See the Medical Centre Here.

The seventy-nine members of the Cambridge University Medical Society, who for the last three days have been inspecting New York hospitals and colleges, will leave this morning for New Haven, where for two days they will be the guests of the Yale University Faculty.

The group, all of whom are English students, completed their New York inspection tour by visiting yesterday the Medical Centre in the course of construction at 168th Street and Broadway and the present buildings of the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Fifty-ninth Street and Amsterdam Avenue. After their visit to the Medical Centre and the College of Physicians and Surgeons, the students were taken to the home of Harry J. Fisher at Greenwich, where they were entertained by the English-Speaking Union.

The group is scheduled to spend the last three days of the week in Boston. The students will sail from that city for England on Saturday.

DINNER FOR LADY ASTOR.

Will Be Guest of League of Women Voters Thursday—Sails on Friday.

Owen D. Young and Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt will be speakers at the dinner which the New York League of Women Voters will give for Lady Nancy Astor at the Waldorf next Thursday evening. Mr. Young, a member of the league's advisory committee, will welcome Lady Astor. Mrs. Catt, founder of the league, will express the good wishes which will go with Lady Astor on her departure for England the next day. Miss Katharine Ludington, national treasurer of the league, will preside.

The Committee on Arrangements, of which Mrs. Montgomery Hare is Chairman, has received many requests for tickets. The committee has arranged with the Radio Corporation of America to have Lady Astor's speech broadcast from Station WJZ at 9 o'clock.

LEAVES $100 TO RESCUER.

"In appreciation of her heroic act in saving my life, I hereby bequeath the sum of $100 to Anna Saul, of 1,390 Plimton Street, Highbridge," read part of the will of Miss Mabel Otis, librarian of Jamaica, Queens, filed with Surrogate Daniel Noble of Queens County. Miss Otis died July 22, three days after she made her will, which amounts to $2,500 real and $1,100 personal property.

Friends of Miss Otis said yesterday that she and Miss Saul had been spending their vacation in the country and that Miss Otis was saved from drowning by her companion.

Just as Honest and Moral as Ever, Says the Rev. Dr. Scratchley.

The young people of today are not interested in Abraham or Moses, the Rev. Dr. Henry Peter Scratchley of Murray Hill, N. J., declares in the current issue of The Living Church, published in Milwaukee, a national weekly of the "high church" school in the Episcopal communion. Dr. Scratchley defends modern youth as to honesty, straightforwardness, cleanness and morality, but declares that the clearest thinkers, the most straightforward and the most intellectual are now outside the churches.

"My forty years experience as a teacher of boys makes me decidedly of the opinion that the modern boy and girl are just as honest, just as straightforward, just as clean and just as moral as any ever were," says Dr. Scratchley.

BOY BURGLAR SHOT AFTER 62-CENT THEFT

A boy was shot by a policeman in the right forearm and his companion suffered a fracture of a rib while attempting last night to escape from a grocery store at Lenox Avenue and 113th Street, whose cash register they had looted of 62 cents. The bullet victim is George Bohay, 13 years old, of 11 St. Nicholas Avenue. Irving Klein, 14 years old, of 79 St. Nicholas Place, who was with him, received his injury in a fall from a window sill. The boys were treated at Harlem Hospital, where their condition was declared not to be serious, and later they were taken to the West 123d Street police station and held on a charge of juvenile delinquency.

The boys entered the store through a rear window. The ladder of the fire-escape was down, thus aiding them to reach the window, which was open, according to their story. Neighbors saw them entering and notified Patrolman Hugh J. Curry of the West 123d Street Station. Because of the darkness it was believed that the burglars were adults. The policeman was about to force the front door when the owner, Louis Munoz, arrived and opened it. The boys had just obtained the contents of the register and were climbing out the rear window, which opens from a small anteroom to the rear yard. The policeman heard them, hurried to the rear of the store and ordered them to come out. There was no reply when he repeated his order and he flung open the door and fired.

With young Bohay's cry of pain Officer Curry realized that the burglars were boys. He immediately fixed a tourniquet to stop the blood and summoned an ambulance from Harlem Hospital. Meanwhile, Klein at the policeman's order slipped from the windowsill to the anteroom floor and was injured, so both were taken to the hospital. In their story to the police the boys said that Klein, who formerly lived in the neighborhood, had returned to Lenox Avenue, met Bohay and told him he needed some money. Klein asked Bohay if he knew a place that could be broken into and Bohay suggested the grocery. The boys deny having been arrested previously, though Klein admitted being taken to station houses for staying out all night and said he was once taken from the roof of a motion picture theatre when he tried to force an entrance.

Firemen to Meet at North Pelham.

NORTH PELHAM, N. Y., Sept. 5.—At a meeting of the North Pelham and Pelham fire companies, to be held at the local fire hall Monday evening, plans will be discussed for the annual parade and inspection of the fire companies of the first fire district on Friday, Sept. 24. Preliminary arrangements have already been made and committees appointed. Due to difficulties last year in the awarding of the prize cup, no prizes will be offered this year.

COOLIDGE WON'T ASK TRUST LAW CHANGES

changed this month to give the Administration control, the board is expected to conform to these ideas.

The agitation begun by Professor Ripley has impressed Mr. Coolidge, and, according to latest reports, he hopes to find that the present law will permit the Federal Trade Commission to demand of corporations full and adequate reports on their financial operations. This, he feels, will not disturb honest business concerns, but will tend to eliminate the questionable companies and stabilize investments.

While the coming session of Congress will be short and can do very little in the way of constructive legislation, President Coolidge feels that there are two important questions before it that ought to be solved to help business.

One of these is the providing of a Federal fund for loans to cooperative marketing association, similar to the adminstration proposal in the Fess bill. The more he has studied the farm problem the more Mr. Coolidge has become convinced that this is about the strongest thing the Federal Government can do toward relieving the farmers without breaking economic policies, and he is expected to refer to this plan in his message.

For Rail Consolidation.

The other question is the enactment of the Parker railroad consolidation bill. This differs from the measure sponsored by Senator Cummins in that it proposes consolidation along natural lines and does not require compulsory consolidation for a period of years. The bill, approved by many railroad heads, carries a plan to protect stockholders and prevent the minority being placed in a disadvantageous position.

The message is expected to oppose independence for the Philippine Islands on the ground that the Filipinos have not progressed enough to justify the United States in turning them loose, that they would be a source of international trouble and that they would not be able to continue alone because of the lack of industrial and financial strength.

As against the demand of some of the corn belt States for a readjustment of the tariff, the message will oppose tariff revision and assert that the flexible tariff clause offers the medium for any needed revision that changed conditions may seem to require for a particular schedule.

Seeing no hope of the anthracite operators and miners agreeing to the railroad plan of settling disputes, the President will recommend that Congress provide for a board to adjust the labor and wage differences and a commission to regulate the distribution of coal in case of a strike. This legislation will be strongly stressed.

To Favor Andrews's Dry Law Plan.

As to prohibition legislation, the President is expected to recommend the passage of a law which will remove the enforcement of the Volstead law from the Internal Revenue Bureau and place it under an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. This and other prohibition legislation which seeks to strengthen border control and make search easier were pigeonholed in the last session of Congress. The bills were prepared by General Andrews, and it is understood that he will resign unless he is upheld by the Administration.

As to settlement of the foreign war debts, the World Court and the Mexican program, all these are in a state of flux and are not now being seriously considered for definite statement in the message. Their treatment will depend upon coming developments.

The outstanding burden of the message, as indicated in statements here by the President and in discussions with his advisers, is that it will offer no new recommendations on business that will be of a disturbing nature and tend to act as a deterrent to the present business progress.

Today, the first rainy Sunday the President has spent in the mountains, he and his family and guests motored to Saranac Lake to attend services in the First Presbyterian Church. With the President and Mrs. Coolidge were their son, John, and Representative and Mrs. B. H. Snell, their house guests.

Earle P. Charlton, Vice President of Woolworth's, will arrive tomorrow to continue the discussion of business conditions with the President, which have been the chief topic of the Summer conferences Mr. Coolidge has held with men representing all kinds of activities.

CARDS TOPPLE REDS AND REGAIN LEAD

LUQUE LASTS SIX INNINGS

Lucas Replaces Him—Bell and Dressen Hit Home Runs—Reds' Rallies Are in Vain.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, Sept. 5.—The Cards regained first place in the seething National League pennant race by defeating the Reds before more than 32,000 fans, 5,000 of whom made the trip from St. Louis, by the score of 7 to 3 at Redland Field this afternoon. The veteran Grover Cleveland Alexander was the choice of Manager Rogers Hornsby and the veteran went the limit, while Adolfo Luque, star Red hurler, failed to finish the game. The cards now lead the Reds by the close margin of five points.

The triumphal return to first place was marked by the combination of Alexander's veteran right arm, directed by his astute mind, and by the Cardinal defense as well as its high powered attack. Making the task even more simple was a ragged Red defense which cracked at various stages of the conflict, usually when the Cardinals were storming Luque the hardest. Luque was relieved after the Cardinals had raised their total to a half dozen in the sixth inning.

Up to that moment the Cardinals had belabored to the various fields nine hits, ranging up to L. Bell's homer in the temporary bleachers in left field. The assault also was accentuated by two-base blows off the bats of Hafey, Thevenow and O'Farrell.

Thevenow Scores Two Men.

Thevenow played up to the heroic rôle in which his home town Mayor and fellow citizens of Madison, Ind., raised him prior to the game, when they celebrated "Thevenow Day," by presenting their 23-year-old big league luminary with an assortment of gifts.

It was Thevenow who gave the St. Louis fans their first real chance to opened up their vocal thunder. This occurred in the second inning, when, with two mates on the corners, he doubled down the left field line. The blow permitted both runners to score, and brought the first indication that the Reds were laboring under a strain, for Dressen somewhat aided in the inning's run production by throwing a relay over Hargrave's head.

Thevenow also aided in Cardinal scoring in the sixth, when he beat out a hit to Luque with Hafey on third. This hit so unsteadied Luque that he threw the ball over his catcher's head, thus opening the plate's gate also for O'Farrell.

It is true the Reds battered Alexander rather roughly down the stretch innings of the struggle and turned a shutout rout into a more respectable defeat, but Alexander, although weakening, was strong enough to withstand the hardest Cincinnati pounding and to win his second game in four days.

Reds Expected a Southpaw.

Alex was a surprise pitcher to the Reds. They had anticipated Southpaw Reinhart's selection and had batted against left-handed pitching in their pre-game practice. Reinhart had been Hornsby's original choice for the final game of the series, but after the Cardinals lost their lead and when Alex asked Hornsby to let him pitch the last game Hornsby switched his plans.

In his victory Alex yielded nine hits, six of which were bunched in the sixth, seventh and eighth innings, when the Reds scored all their runs. Before the strain of working with only two days rest began to tell on Alex's aging right wing, the Reds could not get a man as far as second base for six innings. Then they were forced to call upon a new batter, Lucas, who broke Alex's charm by tripling over Douthit's head. A sacrifice fly scored Lucas. In the seventh the Reds scored again on Dressen's homer into the left field overflow, while in the eighth they counted their final marker on a single by Roush, a pass to Walker and a single by Pipp.

Alex Strong at Finish.

The defense came to Alex's aid in this instance for the Reds were checked in a hurry when Lester Bell turned Dressen's hard hit grounder into a double play. Alex ended the game by taming Lucas on a pop fly and Christensen on a foul fly to O'Farrell after Ford had doubled with one out in the ninth.

Off Luque and Lucas the Cardinals aggregated twelve hits and enjoyed run harvesting in five different innings. Hafey's double, O'Farrell's pass and Thevenow's double, together with Dressen's bad throw, gave the Cardinals two runs in the second. Bell hit a homer into the left field overflow in the fourth. Douthit's single, Southworth's long sacrifice fly and Hornsby's single through Critz enabled the Cards to score again in the fifth.

The two sixth inning markers went across on the strength of a pass to Hafey, O'Farrell's double, Thevenow's infield hit and Luque's wild throw past Hargrave. The final run off Lucas was manufactured with two gone in the ninth, Douthit doubling to right centre and completing the circuit on Southworth's single to centre.

The Cincinnati defense made errors. The Cardinals erred only once. This miscue was charged to Hornsby, who tried to hurry a play on Lucas's grounder in the seventh. The boot did no damage.

When the game was over hundreds of the St. Louis delegation surrounded the Cardinals' dressing rooms and rent the air with deafening applause. The rooters had come all the way from St. Louis, many of them losing a night's sleep, to exhort their warriors to retake the commanding heights, and the Cardinal players rewarded them.

The majority of the rooters returned to St. Louis tonight and will arrive there in the morning, but there are many more who will make the journey to Pittsburgh in order to be on hand for the morning and afternoon games in the Smoky City tomorrow.

CUBS DOWN PIRATES IN FINAL AT HOME

Chicago Fans Cast Straw Hats on Field as Game Ends in a 7-6 Victory.

CHICAGO, Sept. 5 (F).—Chicago closed the National League season here today with a 7 to 6 victory over Pittsburgh, making it three games out of the four-game series. The game was delayed for more than an hour on account of a drizzling rain, and it was agreed to call it at 5:45 o'clock to enable the Pirates to catch a train.

Chicago scored four runs at the start, forcing Yde to retire before any one had been put out. It again bunched hits in the fourth for two more runs. Pittsburgh rallied in the closing innings, forcing Osborn to retire and tying the score in the sixth inning, when the game was called.

With only a few minutes to play, Manager McCarthy rushed three pinch hitters into the game and two of them delivered. Freigau doubled to left and scored when Kelly singled to centre with the deciding run. The game then was called, and from the thousands of fans who had remained through the drizzle came an avalanche of straw hats onto the field.

The attendance was estimated at 15,000, being held down by rain flurries early in the day and a steady downpour at game time that gave little hope of permitting a contest.

ALTOONA RACE POSTPONED.

New Date for Auto Classic Made Sept. 18 to Avoid Conflict.

ALTOONA, Pa., Sept. 5 (F).—The annual Labor Day automobile race, scheduled for tomorrow at the Altoona speedway, was today postponed until Saturday, Sept. 18, because of unfavorable weather conditions.

It was necessary to set the date ahead for two weeks, officials said, in order that the local classic would not conflict with a race scheduled for Detroit during the intervening period.

The Altoona race, a 250-mile grind, has been one of the country's principal Labor Day sporting events for several years.

Yanks Need to Win 17 of Remaining 22 Games In Order to Clinch American League Pennant

The American League race has narrowed down to a fight between the Yankees and the Indians. The Athletics, now ten games in the rear, are virtually counted out, but the Indians, six games behind, are still conceded a chance. The Yanks and Indians have twenty-two games remaining on their schedules and the Yankees need to win seventeen to clinch the pennant, regardless of whether the Indians win all their remaining games.

The final standing then would read:

	Won.	Lost.	P.C.
New York	99	55	.643
Cleveland	98	56	.636

If the Yankees won half of their remaining games it would be necessary for Cleveland to capture eighteen to triumph.

The standing then would be:

	Won.	Lost.	P.C.
New York	93	61	.604

If the Yankees continue to set the same pace to the end of the race that they have maintained up to the present, which is .621 ball, it means that if they win thirteen of the remaining games it will be necessary for the Indians to capture twenty of the last twenty-two.

The standing then would be:

Cleveland	96	58	.623
New York	95	59	.617

The race in the National League, with four teams in the fight, is too close to make any approximation at this time.

INDIANS AND TIGERS DIVIDE DOUBLE BILL

BURNS GETS 60TH DOUBLE

Smashes Speaker's Record, Made in 1923—Nightcap Is Called to Make Train Connections.

CLEVELAND, Sept. 5 (F).—Cleveland and Detroit split a double-header today, the Indians winning the first game, 8 to 7, in twelve innings and the Tigers the second, 2 to 0, in five innings, the contest being called to allow the Cleveland team to catch a train for St. Louis.

Dauss of Detroit and Buckeye of Cleveland did some effective relief pitching in the first inning of the opening fray after Levsen, Karr and Wells had been driven from the box.

The only runs of the second game were scored in the fifth inning, when Detroit bunched three hits with a pass to send two men across the plate. Gibson was threatened twice by Cleveland, but tightened each time.

George Burns, Cleveland first sacker, broke the major league two-base hit record in the first game, hitting his sixtieth double, thus breaking the record of fifty-nine set by Manager Tris Speaker of the Indians in 1923. The event was received with a shower of straw hats, while Speaker, the runner ahead of Burns on the bases, had time taken out while he ran to second base to congratulate his player.

Largest Crowd Ever to Watch Champion Train Impressed by His Exhibition.

SPARRING MATES SUFFER

Nine Rounds Constitute Drill, Six of Them Boxing—Ring Notables There.

By JAMES P. DAWSON.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Sept. 5.—The largest crowd ever to see Jack Dempsey in action in a training camp and a more than ordinarily representative gathering saw the world's heavyweight champion go through an impressive workout here this afternoon and left the plant expressing admiration for the titleholder after one of the best exhibitions of form Dempsey has displayed since he started training for the defense of his title against Gene Tunney.

The gathering was estimated at close to 5,000. Promoter Tex Rickard and Gertrude Ederle were conspicuous figures. Others were Chairman Frank Wiener of the Pennsylvania Boxing Commission, George Engel, friend and associate of Billy Gibson, Tunney's manager; Johnny Dundee, Mrs. Dundee and their daughter, Lucille; Bill Duffy, New York manager of fighters; Willie Jackson, famous Bronx lightweight of another day, who boasts the only knockout victory ever scored over Dundee; Georgie Courtney, Oklahoma's promising young middleweight, and Eddie (Kid) Wagner, Philadelphia lightweight.

Has One of Best Days.

Dempsey has had good days, bad days and indifferent days since he started training here nearly two weeks ago, but he had one of his best days today. His sparring partners, or rather their condition and their exclamations after tasting of the champion's punches, were expert testimony in support of this conclusion.

Mike Arnold, Fort Worth (Texas) heavyweight, left the ring with his mouth spraying blood after a torrid round with the champion, during which the lad from the Lone Star State was sent down in a sitting position from a right to the jaw as Dempsey in one exchange turned his mate half around and drove home the blow. Martin Burke, lanky New Orleans light-heavyweight, described the situation as terrible from a sparring partner's point of view.

"It's going to be hard for any man to keep his shoulders off the floor with Dempsey tearing and slashing and hitting that way," said Burke after two rounds with the titleholder.

Charlie Anderson, 212-pound negro from Chicago, mumbled something along the same lines after exposing himself to two rounds of about the most severe body drubbing Anderson has experienced since he joined the camp.

Dempsey went through nine rounds, all told. He devoted six rounds of this to boxing and went one round each on the light bag, the heavy bag and shadow boxing. He boxed two rounds with Anderson, one with Arnold, two with Burke and one with Frankie Busch, Norwich (Conn.) light-heavyweight. The champion dispensed with calisthenics for the second day.

Brisk Weather Spurs Him.

A brisk breeze made Dempsey don a sweat shirt and full-length green gymnasium tights again and acted like a tonic. Dempsey put on an exhibition of his famous shift. Perfecting a right feint and a left hook counter. He pressed forward always on his toes or flat-footed as the occasion demanded, and grunted audibly with most of the punches he let fly.

Against Anderson he had plenty of opportunity to try his shift and to unlimber his heavy artillery to the body. The champion wasted no time in preliminaries, but ripped right into Anderson and had the negro gritting his teeth as he quaked under the impact of rights and lefts to the body and occasional left hooks to the head.

The champion, varying his attack, drove home with the starboard paw over Anderson's left jabs. Lefts and rights banged into Anderson's body through the first round and the second until it seemed that the Chicagoan must collapse. But Anderson withstood the assault, gritting his teeth with almost every punch and clinching and holding in the mistaken belief that this would still Dempsey's fire. As a matter of fact at close quarters the champion was more vicious. In the second session Dempsey missed two lefts for the jaw which, had they landed, would have carried destruction.

Arnold Lands Frequently.

Arnold stepped along nicely with the champion, giving Dempsey a good drill and hitting the champion rather freely with right hand smashes to the face, taking advantage of a weakness which has been a characteristic of Dempsey's fighting style. The success Arnold enjoyed in this respect was jarred when the champion suddenly nicked him with a grazing left and right to the jaw which sent him bounding off the ropes and flounder-ing around the ring.

The instinctive urge to crush was upon Dempsey at this and the champion leaped in eagerly. Arnold straightened up, however, and beat Dempsy to a right to the face and regretted it almost immediately for the champion went close and as Arnold sought to clinch, he was turned half around and sent squatting with a club-like right to the jaw.

In his two rounds against Burke the champion didn't look as impressive as he had in the preceding rounds, but Dempsey was faster if anything on his feet and with his hands. Dempsey tried his shift against Burke but couldn't make it effective, and in the action at close quarters Dempsey was at something of a disadvantage for Burke, an experienced ring man and accustomed to every move of the title-holder, invariably pinioned Dempsey's arms or warded off body attack.

Dempsey Lands on Body.

Repeatedly Burke got through with rights to Dempsey's face, blows which were landed for the most part as Burke was going away. In the second session, however, Dempsey punched Burke's body hard and near the bell knocked Marty off balance with a right to the head, only to straighten the New Orleans boxer again with a left which followed immediately.

Busch, a good defensive boxer, gave the champion a fast workout in hitting an active moving target. Dempsey spent more than a minute trying to connect with lefts or rights, but withholding the blows as he pressed in and it was evident he could not land. Finally, however, the champion let fly with a left and right which, though landing high, bounced Busch back against the ropes and at the bell Dempsey was punching with both hands to the head at long range and to the body in the clinches.

Lou Brennan, Harrisburg, Penn., heavyweight, joined the camp staff today and got a try-out with Jimmy Brown, negro welterweight, which was not exactly impressive for Brennan. Whether he will be retained, however, was not announced.

Before donning his gymnasium suit this afternoon, Dempsey presented watches to six local young newsboys who won their prizes in a newsboys' boxing tournament. The champion, after presenting the watches, posed for several pictures with the youngsters.

"Sure Looked Good to Me," Rickard's View of Dempsey

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Sept. 5.—"Jack sure looked good to me," declared Tex Rickard after watching Dempsey's workout today. "He was fast and light on his feet and he was hitting with force. He snapped his blows and drove them home hard."

The promoter declared that he was being flooded with requests for tickets and that he expected the greatest crowd in history would see the battle in Philadelphia. He said that his visit to Atlantic City had nothing to do with business and that his visit to Dempsey's bungalow in the morning was merely social.

BERLENBACH MAY STAY IN HICKEY'S CHARGE

Boxer and Manager Expected to Patch Up Their Differences and Resume Relations.

Paul Berlenbach, former light heavyweight champion of the world, who broke relations with his discoverer and manager, Dan Hickey, last week, is likely to return to Hickey shortly, it was learned yesterday. Berlenbach, who is at his Summer home at Long Beach, L. I., could not be reached, but Manager Hickey admitted at his home in Corona that the breach has narrowed and that there was a possibility of everything being adjusted soon.

Berlenbach was reported to have paid Hickey $40,000 for his release last week, but it was said yesterday that no money as yet has changed hands. Hickey said that he has had no word from Berlenbach since the middle of last week, but news had reached him that Berlenbach was ready to overlook their differences and again place himself under his direction.

"I do not care to discuss the Berlenbach affair at this time," said Hickey. "When Paul and I parted I made it clear to him that I would give him a few days to think it over. He has not reported to me yet and he will find me ready to meet him more than half way if he wants to come back."

The cause of the break, it is pointed out, was the fact that Berlenbach wanted Hickey's exclusive attention and resented Hickey's devoting so much time to training Monte Munn, brother of Wayne, who is being carefully groomed for work among the heavyweight headliners.

All credit for Berlenbach's rapid march to the top in boxing, goes to Hickey. Berlenbach was a star wrestler and it was Hickey who induced him to forsake the mat for the ring.

NURMI TO RETURN HERE.

Plans to Start Training at Drake University About Nov. 15.

Paavo Nurmi of Finland will be seen on American indoor tracks this Winter, it was learned yesterday. Ossie Solem, athletic director at Drake University, Des Moines, Iowa, announced that he had word from Nurmi that the Finnish star distance runner would reach this country about Nov. 1, that he would arrive at Drake University about Nov. 15 and that he would do his training there until Dec. 18.

Solem also announced that Nurmi would compete in meets at Drake on Dec. 11 and 18, before he started on his tour which would include match races in the important cities. It also was intimated that Edwin Wide, the Swedish star, would be seen against Nurmi in a number of match races.

RAINY DAY KEEPS TUNNEY INACTIVE

SAYS ALTITUDE IS HELPFUL

Believes Shift to Less Rarified Atmosphere of Philadelphia Will Be Advantage.

By RICHARDS VIDMER.

Special to The New York Times.

STROUDSBURG, Pa., Sept. 5.—The steady pitter-patter on the canvas-covered ring in Gene Tunney's training camp today was not caused by falling opponents, but falling rain. All day long there was a steady downpour and the inhabitants of the Pocono Mountains were disappointed that the challenger had to call off his workout.

But the rain didn't keep many of the curious from visiting the Glen Brook Country Club, and a swarm of visitors forced Gene into the Town of Stroudsburg to escape attention. He pitched his camp in the rustic outskirts of the city in order to have as much privacy as possible, but he found a better opportunity for rest and relaxation where traffic was heaviest.

The challenger joined a gathering of men in the Penn Stroud Hotel and talked of everything from cabbages to kings. In between, the conversation turned to fistic matters in general and the approaching battle for the world's heavyweight title in particular. But no matter what the subject the ex-marine showed that he had his own theories and philosophies. Apparently he has analyzed every angle of his training and definitely decided upon a system. In vain his listeners sought to discover a phase he hadn't considered.

Believes Altitude Helps.

"Don't you think it might be harmful to train in this high altitude and then fight Dempsey in a lower region, where the air is heavier?" was one of the questions asked. Tunney never hesitated in his reply.

"On the other hand, I think it will be beneficial," he declared. "There is less oxygen in the air up here than there is in Philadelphia, which is nearer the sea level. It would be foolish to train down there and fight up here, but training here and then going to a lower altitude for the fight is like a baseball player swinging three bats and then hitting with one."

"What about training at night? I see Dempsey is going to work at night so as to become accustomed to the artificial lights," another remarked.

"The same theory applies to that," Gene explained. "The big lights they will have in the ring at the Sesquicentennial Stadium will be brighter than daylight. I have never found any trouble with arc lights except once. That was in Newark, where I fought Knockout Sullivan under very weak illumination. He rushed at me in the first round and hit me a terrific blow on the chin. I couldn't see it coming because of the poor lighting system and couldn't get out of the way. He hit me several times and I couldn't see to ward off the blows.

"'What did you do about it?'

"'Oh, I saw I had to stop him to protect myself and the best way seemed to be by knocking him out. I put him down before the first round was over and he stayed down.'"

Considers a Knockdown.

Some one asked Tunney if he had ever figured out what he would do the first time he was knocked off his feet. The challenger never has been floored during his career in the ring but he showed that he had considered the matter by his ready reply.

"It would all depend on the attitude of my opponent. If he appeared excited and anxious to come on in and finish me by slugging, I would gamble on it and slug with him. If he happened to be a smart fighter, cool and calm, I would go into a clinch and protect myself as best I could. Anybody who can hit can knock a man down, but only the smart ones keep them down."

Tunney even has analyzed his feelings toward the popularity he has gained. He realizes the disadvantages of being continually followed by crowds and never having any privacy to speak of. But he admitted to the writer that he rather likes the attention he has received since his rise to the top.

"If I win the championship, perhaps a time will come when I will wish that I was a shipping clerk or a private in the marines again," he said. "But right now I am enjoying my fame. I am not conceited enough to want to be alone and above the people who come to see me. I realize that fame is fleeting and I am enjoying it and making friendships while it lasts."

Changes His Program.

The rainy day forced the challenger to change his program for the week. He had planned to work today and rest tomorrow, but because of his enforced idleness this afternoon he has decided to return to the ring for a strenuous workout tomorrow and again on Wednesday, Thursday and Saturday.

Tunney is so near to physical perfection right now and the fight is still so far off that he fears reaching the peak before the proper time. Because of that he is still taking his preparation by easy stages.

His sparring partners, however, grow impatient because of the inactivity, as two of them are preparing for battles of their own. Bud Gorman, the big heavyweight who captured the admiration of the crowd here yesterday, is scheduled for a bout in Albany during the coming week and Harold Mays is preparing for his coming bout with Jack De Mave, which will be the feature attraction at the children's benefit show on Sept. 15 at Bayonne, N. J.

More Applause Is Accorded Miss Ederle Than Dempsey as She Watches Workout

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Sept. 5.—Gertrude Ederle came here today to watch Jack Dempsey train for his title battle with Gene Tunney. The popularity of the first woman to conquer the English Channel was attested by the applause which greeted her appearance. The welcome was spontaneous and made the applause accorded to the heavyweight champion seem like a whisper in comparison.

Miss Ederle, who was accompanied by Dudley Field Malone, her manager, watched Dempsey intently as he punched the bags and went through his sparring with his training mates. She professed to know nothing about boxing, but expressed great admiration for the champion.

"I think he's wonderfully big and strong," she said. "He seems so powerful. My, I'd hate to have him sock me. Is that the proper word 'sock'?"

MALONE AND COOLIDGE AT BROOKLYN TONIGHT

Thirty-six rounds of boxing are on the boxing program arranged by the Fort Hamilton officials. The card, which consists of two eight-round, two six-round and a brace of four-round bouts, will be held tonight at Ninety-ninth Street and Fourth Avenue, Brooklyn. The show originally was scheduled for last Thursday night, but was postponed.

The main engagement, which will be over the eight-round distance, will bring together Chic Malone of the Fourteenth Regiment of Brooklyn and Ted Coolidge, United States Navy middleweight. In the other eight-rounder Gord Hall of Germany will oppose Joe Fatone of Williamsburg. Bobby Ray of Fort Hamilton and Joe Emmons of West Point are slated to entertain in a six-round bout, while in another six-rounder Jack Moore of the 369th Infantry and Leo Cox of Borough Hall will meet.

The special four-round battles will bring together Rocky Corbett of South Brooklyn and Kid Corey of the Fourteenth Infantry and Tom Lung of China and Eddie Purtell of Borough Hall.

Harry Wallach of Brooklyn and Sig Keppen of Beaver Falls, Pa., will come together in the feature battle of six rounds at the Long Beach Stadium tonight. The proceeds will be donated to the Church of St. Mary of the Isle of Long Beach. In the six-round semi-final Willie O'Connell will oppose Jaquito Valdez.

Three other six-round battles and a four-rounder will complete the card. In the six-round bouts Johnny Ryan will meet Tommy Simms, Lou Moskowitz will face Arthur De Champlain and Walter Hogan will engage Willie Schmidt. The opening four-rounder will present Vincent Cantalmo and Eddie Nelson.

Another attractive program of amateur bouts has been arranged for the Coney Island Stadium tonight. The schedule calls for ten bouts of three rounds each. Some of the best boys in this territory are scheduled to appear.

Martone to Engage Fagan.

Harry Martone of Jersey City and Irish Fagan of Newark will clash in the twelve-round wind-up at the Oakland Athletic Club in Jersey City tomorrow night. Fred Black of Jersey City and Johnny Saxon, Bridgeport (Conn.) welterweight, one of Jack Dempsey's sparring partners, will meet in the twelve-round semi-final. Three other battles will complete the program.

Writers to Elect During Series.

CLEVELAND, Sept. 5 (AP).—The annual meeting and election of officers of the Baseball Writers Association of America will be held on the second day of the world series in the city winning the American League championship. President James M. Gould, St. Louis, announced today.

MURRAY IN DEBUT TO ENGAGE ELKINS

New Zealander, on Queensboro Card, Has Compiled 50 Per Cent. Knockout Average.

Lightweights will do the entertaining in one of the feature bouts at the Queensboro Stadium at Long Island City tomorrow night. A new face will be seen in the feature ten-round battle in the person of Les Murray of New Zealand. Murray boasts an excellent reputation and he will have an opportunity to display his skill against Murray Elkins of Harlem.

Murray has been boxing for four years and in that time has a 50 per cent. record of knockouts in his battles. One of his knockouts was at the expense of Herb McCoy, holder of the Australian lightweight title, whom he stopped in the first round. Another was over Earl France of California, scoring his triumph in five rounds. Murray also registered a decision over Silvino Jamito, Filipino lightweight, in a fifteen-round battle in Australia.

In the main bout Tommy (Kid) Murphy of Trenton will meet K. O. Billy White of Jersey City. The third ten-round engagement will mark the return of Charley Rosen from a successful trip to California. Rosen's opponent will be Joey Kaufmann, who will substitute for Alf Mancini, British lightweight, who injured his shoulder in training.

Moskowitz Boxes Scafaro.

The preliminaries will consist of one six-round and one-four-round battle. In the six-rounder Lou Moskowitz will square off against Joe Scafaro and in the opening bout Nick Penuti will engage Willie Feldman.

Joe Marino and Oscar Pultz of the Engineers will entertain in the windup of ten rounds at the weekly boxing show which will be held in the Twenty-second Engineers Regiment Armory tomorrow night. In the ten-round semi-final Frisco Bautista of the U. S. S. Dobbins and Bobby Anderson of the 369th Infantry will meet. Three other bouts will complete the program.

Harry Persson of Sweden, one of the latest to fight his way into the limelight for heavyweight title recognition, will make his second appearance in an American ring when he meets Carl Carter of Cuba in one of the ten-round bouts at Madison Square Garden on Thursday night.

On the strength of his showing against Johnny Risko of Cleveland in his American début, Persson has earned a place on the program which will precede the Jack Dempsey-Gene Tunney championship battle in Philadelphia on the night of Sept. 23. Persson originally was scheduled to meet Sergeant Jack Adams, but the latter was forced to withdraw on account of illness.

Joe Dundee at Garden.

Joe Dundee of Baltimore, star welterweight, will swing into action when he faces Eddie Burnbrook of Camp Holabird, Md., in another ten-rounder on the same program. Dundee impressed local boxing followers in his meeting with Micky Walker in the Garden ring when the former champion failed to last the limit. Dundee's ambition now is to arrange a title meeting with Pete Latzo.

Another welterweight bout is on the program and it will mark the American début of Jack Hood. English welterweight champion, who will meet Jimmy Jones of Youngstown. Hood made a fine record abroad and is rated as a hard hitting, crafty boxer. He will be put to the test against a fighter of the type of Jones.

John Patrick Sullivan of Ireland and Little Jack Horner of St. Louis will clash in a six-round preliminary, while the opening four-round battle will bring together Vince Dundee, brother of Joe, and Charlie Sapko, the Czechoslovakian junior welterweight.

TITLE BOUT SALES KEEP STEADY PACE

ONE ORDER FROM HONOLULU

Request for Twelve Ringside Seats Comes From Hawaii — Press Reservations Are Heavy.

Promoter Tex Rickard may spend the day at Atlantic City watching Champion Jack Dempsey, and rain may keep Gene Tunney idle at Stroudsburg, but the weather failed to check the demands for tickets for the heavyweight championship classic which will be waged in Philadelphia on Sept. 23. Benny Bennett, one of Rickard's authorities on ticket distribution, has returned from Philadelphia, where he was working with Joe Boyton for more than a week.

Bennett admitted yesterday that in all his experience in caring for tickets he has never had anything equal to the demand for a fight that the coming battle has created. While the rain was falling gently on all sides, the messengers were busy bringing requests to the Garden headquarters. One message was from Honolulu, asking for twelve ringside seats. In all the total requests for the day exceeded $25,000, which, according to Bennett, was not so bad for a rainy day.

Bennett said that he could not recall a fight in which the high priced seats were in such demand. He said that the ringside supply was nearly exhausted but there were still some very good seats in the $22 zone, which, of course, would be in the stands and not on the field.

Capacity Again Increased.

Rickard now realizes, according to Bennett, that the fight would draw 200,000 if he could guarantee the seats, and for that reason everything is being done to utilize every inch of space in the huge stadium at the Sesquicentennial grounds. The original plans called for 150,000 seats, then Rickard announced that 10,000 more would be added, and now the promoter has the engineers busy trying to find out how another 10,000 can be added.

The stadium proper will seat 84,000, according to Bennett, who has had a chance to study the seating plans. There will be room for 30,000 on the field, bringing the total to 114,000. Now the plans call for the closing of the ends of the giant horseshoe, and by so doing it is hoped to add another 25,000 seats.

Bennett made it clear that there will be no standees for this battle and that the only persons without a permanent seat will be the 1,500 or more ushers, the guards and other officials. It was pointed out that even the general admission tickets, which sell for $3.30, will call for a seat.

Despite this announcement, there is a belief that many thousands will be in attendance who will not be able to find a seat. It is on this basis that the estimates have been placed at between 150,000 and 160,000 for the attendance for this title engagement. But there is no denying that the promoters, pulsing the public interest in this clash, are not going to let a prospective ticket purchaser get away without a struggle and that everything will be done to care for every one anxious to see the fight.

Bennett said that he would remain here until the day before the fight, when he will return to Philadelphia with the balance of Rickard's office staff. Ike Dorgan, publicity director for Rickard, was here for a short time yesterday, but returned to Philadelphia last night. He said that he was flooded with requests for press reservations from all parts of the country and that heavy as the demands were in the past nothing equaled the present rush.

MISS RICHTOR NET VICTOR.

GREENWICH, Conn., Sept. 5.—In the final of the women's tennis tournament for the Field Club title, Miss Eleanor Richtor defeated Miss Virginia Truesdale, 6—3, 6—4, today. The men's tournament in singles and doubles for the club championship will begin on Tuesday.

De Mave to Box Mays at Bayonne.

Jack De Mave and Harold Mays, Jersey heavyweights, will entertain in the feature ten-round battle arranged for the benefit of the St. Mary's Camp Fund at the Bayonne (N. J.) Stadium, on Sept. 15. Mike Ballerino, former junior lightweight champion, and John Kochansky will appear in the ten-round semi-final bout. The first ten-rounder will bring together Micky Cangro and Billy White.

Tunney Doubts It Will Take His Best to Beat Dempsey

Special to The New York Times.

STROUDSBURG, Pa., Sept. 5.—Gene Tunney isn't at all certain that it will take his best to win the world's heavyweight championship when he meets Jack Dempsey. The challenger said today that he hasn't yet fought the best fight of which he is capable, even though he has knocked out Tommy Gibbons, Georges Carpentier and many others, and has never been knocked off his feet himself.

"I am positive that I am capable of a better fight than I've ever fought," the challenger explained, "because never yet have I been extended to the limit. I may not even fight my best fight against Dempsey. It may come next year when I am defending the title against the next challenger. Who knows?"

SPARTA TEAM PLAYS FIRST MATCH TODAY

At 3 o'clock at Ebbets Field this afternoon the Sparta soccer club of Prague, Czechoslovakia, will play the first match of its American and Canadian tour. The opponents will be a picked team from the International Soccer League. The rain of yesterday will slow up the field to a marked extent and will make the footing none too good, but soccer players are not greatly handicapped because of an unfavorable field, and this afternoon's contest should be fast and exciting from the very start.

The Czechs have come to this country with a great record. They have scored several victories over the powerful Hakoah organization of Vienna, they have conquered the best teams of Europe and they are determined to meet the best elevens of this country and Canada before they conclude their tour. Their defense and centre lines are reported to be the fastest in all of Europe and the only question that has arisen here is over the lightness of their forward line. This disadvantage is said to be offset, however, in the speed of the little men.

Rivals Form Strong Team.

In the International League are some of the finest soccer players of the East and the eleven that goes on the pitch this afternoon should be one worthy of the metal of any rival. Experts have no doubt that the Czechs will meet a well organized team, one that will display a great amount of team work and sterling soccer. The Internationals should make the afternoon very interesting for the tourists.

The Czechs have been brought here by the Sparta organization of Chicago, many of whose members once belonged to the Prague Club. It is the purpose of the sponsors and visitors to show the American people what the young Republic of Czechoslovakia can do in the way of sports. As Consul General Novak pointed out last week, the Czechs have sent their composers and playwrights to this country, but nothing has come from them in the way of athletics, a division of endeavor in which the Czechs are remarkably proficient.

Young Kada, the star of the team, is expected to give the spectators a thrill this afternoon. He has been developed by the Sparta Club and since his high school days has been playing soccer. He is a civil employe in Prague, a sports writer, but, above all, a soccer player. Those who have seen him in action declare that something new in the sport will be seen when he goes after the ball this afternoon.

Stamina Chief Asset.

One of the chief assets of the Spartans is their stamina. They train with the greatest of care and days before a game they take the utmost caution in selecting food. Trainer Spindler has said that there is no strict diet, each man being allowed to eat those foods that agree with him and all making their own selections, but none of the players ever eat steaks, and while on a tour, follow their native menu as closely as possible.

It has been said that in one of the games in the international series in Spain, prior to coming to America, the Spartans were on the short end of the score midway in the second half. The game was being played at a fast clip and as the end drew nearer, the Czechs put on more speed, to the amazement of the spectators and their rivals. This burst of speed was too much for the opponents, whose lead fell away and the Spartans went on to win by a comfortable margin, their staying powers bringing them success where passing had failed.

To some extent the invaders employ the carpet system of attack, a weapon that proved so powerful to the Bethlehem Steel players when they went out and won the national championship last year. This mode of attack is hard to execute, but is more effective than straight rushes toward the goal when skilled players use it. The Spartans have modified it to suit their particular need, and an unusual style of attack is expected to be seen when the Czechs go after the Internationals today.

VAN RYN BEATS APPEL.

Wins Jersey Coast Team's Title by 6-4, 4-6, 6-4, 7-5.

Special to The New York Times.

BAYHEAD, N. J., Sept. 5.—Kenneth Appel of Orange dropped his title as Jersey Coast tennis champion to John Van Ryn, also of Orange, in an exciting match at the Bayhead Yacht Club today. The score was 6—4, 4—6, 6—4, 7—5.

Appel and Van Ryn will battle for the doubles title tomorrow morning with W. B. Evans of Princeton and George Barker of Newark. Evans and Barker defeated J. P. Stockton of Trenton and W. Scott of South Orange, 6—1, 6—1, in the semi-finals, the only other match played today.

WANDERERS BEAT TORONTO AT SOCCER

GALLAWAY SAVES SHUT-OUT

With a drizzling rain prevailing throughout the match and with most of the 1,500 onlookers standing under umbrellas, the Brooklyn Wanderers wound up their international soccer series with Canadian opponents by defeating the Toronto City eleven, 4 goals to 1, at Hawthorne Field, Brooklyn, yesterday afternoon. The field was heavy and made good combination work difficult. In the series the Wanderers won five games, lost one and tied in two others.

The Canadians were no match for the home team, strengthened by the addition of Hakoah players, and at half-time the Wanderers were leading by 3 to 0.

The first goal came after twelve minutes of play, when Burness passed from the left wing to Conrad. The latter feinted, yielding the ball to Neufeld, who scored with a hard drive. Eisenhoffer, with the cooperation of Conrad, made it 2 to 0 ten minutes later. From a mix-up, ten minutes before the end of the half, Eisenhoffer tallied again with a long drive from twenty yards out.

At the opening of the second half Ferguson headed toward the goal from the right. Smith of Brooklyn managed to punch the ball out, but just then Gallaway jumped into the breach and landed the shot that counted for Toronto's first goal. A pretty bit of dodging on the part of Conrad yielded Brooklyn a fourth goal after thirty minutes of play.

The line-up:

WANDERERS (4).		TORONTO (1).

MOUNTAINEERS TAKE REST.

Jennewine, a 207-Pound Tackle, Reports at Jackson's Mill.

CLARKSBURG, W. Va., Sept. 5.—The Mountaineer football squad passed a quiet Sunday at the Jackson's Mill training camp, many of the men attended church services at Weston or Clarksburg, while others spent their time in reading and resting. Four men were excused by Coach Rodgers last night to go to their homes in near-by towns. An event of importance was the arrival of Fred Jennewine this evening, whose appearance materially enhances West Virginia's line prospects. The Morgantown tackle, who is six feet three inches tall and who tips the scales at 207 pounds, is the largest man on the varsity roster.

He was a first-string substitute on the eleven last year and he is slated to make a strong bid for a regular berth this season. Coach Rodgers intimated tonight that Labor Day will be observed in a manner closely resembling the terminology of the holiday.

No Coney Island Show This Week.

Maxie Rosenbloom was scheduled to appear in the wind-up at the Coney Island Stadium on Friday night, but as the promoters were unable to get a suitable opponent, it was decided to hold no show this week. Joe Jacobs, who helps to arrange the boxing programs, left yesterday morning for Atlantic City.

MARSTON A STROKE AHEAD FOR MASHIE

His Par 74 Enables Him to Lead Ouimet, Who Has 148, for Gold Trophy.

DICK JONES HAS 150 SCORE

Registers a Brilliant 36 on the First Nine, but Is Closely Pressed by Dunphy With 151.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 5.—Max Marston of Philadelphia, former national amateur champion, continued to be the outstanding performer in the gold mashie tournament at T. Suffern Tailer's Ocean Links this afternoon in the second round of the seventy-two-hole medal play. He made a par 74 for the eighteen holes.

Francis Ouimet and Jesse Guilford, both former champions and both having legs on the mashie, scored 73s, but Marston's score of yesterday, a 73, gave him a stroke advantage over Ouimet, with a total of 147 against the latter's 148. These three turned in the best golf today, although several of the others played brilliantly at intervals.

The steady work of Marston caused admiration. He was in extremely difficult positions several times, but made wonderful recoveries. With a little more luck in his putting game he would have exceeded the field by a wide margin. He made a birdie on the sixth with a beautiful drive to the green, after which he dropped a twenty-foot putt. In all he made five birdies, but his score was handicapped both times on the second hole when he made two 6s.

While Marston and Ouimet are leading, they are pressed by Richard Jones with 150 and Chris Dunphy with 151. Jones made a beautiful 36 today going out, which offset his mediocre playing of Saturday, while Dunphy aroused the gallery with a putt which was all of 70 feet at the eighth hole, making a birdie on the hole, which is 510 yards long and is a replica of the road hole, St. Andrews.

Play was handicapped by the wet weather, a heavy drizzle falling all afternoon, but despite this a large crowd witnessed the matches, many parking their cars on the Ocean Drive and watching the play from there.

YATES TAKES TITLE IN BRITISH CHESS

Wins Tourney With a Score of 9½-1½—Michell in Second Place.

F. D. Yates of Leeds, who has represented Great Britain at the international chess congresses in recent years, was the winner of the annual championship tournament of the British Chess Federation just concluded at Edinburgh. Yates finished with a score of 9½ to 1½, and succeeded Sir George Thomas as titleholder. The latter, owing to his Badminton engagements, did not attend the meeting.

R. P. Michell of Kingston, champion of the City of London Chess Club, won the second prize with a score of 7½ to 3½. The other two prize-winners were J. H. Blake of Surbiton and M. E. Goldstein of London, each scoring 6½ to 4½.

The major open tournament resulted in a tie among J. A. J. Drewitt of Hastings, J. H. Morrison of London and E. A. Znosko-Borowsky of Paris, all of whom scored 9 to 2. G. W. Moses of Hemsworth and H. G. Wright of Leicester, each 6½ to 4½, divided the fourth and fifth prizes.

There was also a tie for first and second places in the first-class tournament between the Rev. A. P. Lacy-Hulbert of Birmingham and H. Parsons of Bristol, who scored 7½ to 3½ apiece. The British ladies' championship tournament was won by Mrs. A. Stevenson of London with a score of 8½ to 2½.

Dick Jones's Ball Hits Auto, Comes Back; He Gets Par 5

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 5.—When Dick Jones started for the last hole in the Gold Mashie tourney on T. Suffern Tailer's links here this afternoon he was well down the fairway, but his approach shot sailed off the course. The outlook was not promising, but the ball struck an automobile, bounced back on the links and gave Jones a good lie, from which he got on the green and made his par 5.

ARGENTINE-RUMSON WILL PLAY TODAY

RUMSON, N. J., Sept. 5.—The Orange County polo team will play the combined Argentine-Rumson four in an exhibition match here tomorrow afternoon starting at 4 o'clock. However, only two of the players who were in the line-up of the Orange County team yesterday when it won the Herbert Memorial Cup from the Hurricanes, Thomas Hitchcock and J. Cheever Cowdin will face the Argentine-Rumson poloists.

Harriman and Stoddard, who played an important part in Saturday's victory, will give way to Alfredo Pena and Carleton Burke.

ORANGE COUNTY.	ARGENTINE-R'SON.
No. 1—Pena.	No. 1—Jones Jr.
No. 2—Hitchcock.	No. 2—Nelson.
No. 3—Cowdin.	No. 3—Datins.
Back—Burke.	Back—Andrada.

PENN STATE PROGRESSES.

Coaches to Take Charge After Week of Conditioning.

STATE COLLEGE, Pa., Sept. 5.—Penn State football candidates have completed their first week of conditioning work under the direction of Captain Ken Weston, and Coach Hugo Bezdek and his assistants, Larney Conover and Newsh Bents, will take over the direction of practice from now on. The first game is less than three weeks off.

Assistant Coach Conover will probably report Tuesday morning, having secured permission to spend Labor Day in his lifeguard capacity at Atlantic City. Trainer Lee Houck is also expected this week, sickness in his family having caused a change in his former plans.

Among the candidates who have reported is Musa Serry, Egyptian athlete who entered college as a freshman last year, and he is believed to be the first of his countrymen to don moleskins on an American university gridiron. He is a backfield candidate.

Serry was an all-around athlete at the American University at Cairo, his specialty being soccer. American football made a big appeal to him last year and he is trying to master the fundamentals of backfield play. With a number of veteran backs available he will have little chance to break into action this season, but he feels that the football work will condition him for soccer when that sport opens later in the Fall. He held a regular post on the freshman soccer team last year.

FAGERLUND WINS RUN.

Leads Pedersen in Scandinavian-American League 3-Mile Event.

David Fagerlund, Finnish-American distance star, ran to a victory in the three-mile event over a muddy track at Ulmer Park yesterday in the Scandinavian-American Athletic League's annual track and field championships. Fagerlund completed the distance in 16:21 2-5, leading J. Pedersen and F. Hegg of the Norwegian Turn Society to the tape.

The summaries:

THE WEEK IN SPORTS

National League Race Greatest Since 1908—Crusader Still Has His Admirers—Will Dempsey Miss His Former Manager?—U. S. Favored to Retain Davis Cup This Week.

BASEBALL

There is no doubt about it now—this year's race is the greatest the National League has had since 1908. In that superb three-cornered struggle the Giants, Pirates and Cubs battled down to the last far-flung trench. In the bitter fight of 1926 it is the Pirates, Reds and Cardinals.

The thrilling race turned the bend into September last week and they are coming down the stretch. The Reds and Cards are head and head, the Pirates, laboring a little under the hot pace, pounding along a step behind.

It is no exaggeration to say that this pennant race is absorbing the nation as no other race has done in six years. Its last counterpart was the Cleveland-Chicago-New York combat in the American League in 1920, which ended abruptly when the White Sox bribery scandal shocked baseball.

Developments of the Week.

Last week's developments left the Cincinnati Reds in the lead, but they dropped into second place again yesterday. As they looked during the week the contenders shaped up something like this:

Cincinnati—Held steadily to second place until St. Louis, beating the Pirates, passed the Reds and went into first place. On Friday and Saturday Cincinnati took two straight from the Cardinals and moved into first place. Steadiest of the three, getting the best pitching and apparently under the least strain.

St. Louis—Took four out of five from the Pirates and a double-header from the Cubs. Looked like sure winners, but slumped and were pushed out of the lead by the steady-going Reds. An in-and-out team and showing the strain, even to Manager Hornsby.

Pittsburgh—Had a bad week. Lost four out of five to St. Louis and a Saturday double-header to the Cubs. Dropped two double-headers during the week, a bad sign. Hasn't looked good since the Carey-Adams-Bigbee affair. Most experienced but least prepossessing of the three teams.

In a nutshell, the Reds are more and more impressing those critics who had slighted them as pennant possibilities. The Reds are the pluggers of the league. The Cards are feeling the strain. The Pirates' pitching is weak. But it is still anybody's race.

Hornsby Under a Strain.

Reports that Rogers Hornsby's batting and general play have suffered from the strain of managing the Cardinals gained color on Saturday when the star second baseman collapsed in the first inning at Cincinnati. Hornsby has not been in the best of condition this year. He is undoubtedly under a mental strain. Whether his trouble on Saturday was physical or mental, it is not a good sign for the Cardinals.

In the American League the talk was that the Yankees had cracked. Their lead was once shaved to five and a half games, but no less. They refuse to go under this mark. On Friday at Philadelphia their cause looked desperate, but the team showed its courage by rallying in the second game and then winning the Saturday game behind Pennock.

With only twenty-two contests to play, the Yanks' lead is tremendous. Losing a six-game lead in only twenty-two games would require almost a complete collapse.

When the glowing citations are passed out in this pennant race the name of Herb Pennock should be one of the first called. The veteran left-hander gained his twenty-first victory of the year by blanking the Athletics on Saturday. Barring possibly Ruth (and perhaps not even Ruth), Pennock has been the Yanks' most valuable asset.

BOXING

If Jack Dempsey succeeds in retaining his world's heavyweight championship against the aggressions of Gene Tunney he will jolt a favorite theory of the ring game. For Dempsey, about to participate in what promises to be the greatest spectacle in boxing history, is undertaking a task which, directly or indirectly, has caused the fall of more than one champion before him. To all intents and purposes he now is trying to be the fighter, manager and trainer.

For the first time since Dempsey knocked out the giant Willard at Toledo there is no Jack Kearns about the champion's camp to shoulder responsibilities; and, regardless of how Dempsey may regard Kearns today, it cannot be denied that he relied greatly on his manager in the past when matters of importance came up, both inside and outside the ring. In Gus Wilson and the faithful Jerry the Greek Dempsey has two capable handlers, and an equally capable representative, as he chooses to call him, in Gene Normile, for all business affairs. But Dempsey unmistakably is the boss.

Willard's Methods Unsuccessful.

How Dempsey will fare under this new arrangement promises to provide one of the most interesting sidelights of the bout. Willard attempted to train himself at Toledo and made a bad job of it. Many believe Firpo would have fared better against Dempsey had he put himself in capable hands before the fight.

It is possible that a defect in Dempsey's system already is to be found in the in-and-out work that has characterized his training during the past week. Still, it is to be noted that few, if any, are openly criticizing the champion's methods yet. Three years out of the ring, he has brought himself into the final weeks of the campaign in marvelous physical condition. Whether he succeeds in tuning up his fighting form to concert pitch remains to be seen.

Tunney's Work Unimpressive.

As for Tunney, he is moving along under the old approved method of having a manager who looks after his every want, and yet he has not shown anything remarkable in training to date. The challenger is counting much on "mental attitude." But should mental attitude stray into a left hook, particularly of the Dempsey variety, the result is likely to be disastrous.

In the meantime, events in the great drama are rushing to their climax. It now seems a certainty that close to 150,000 will see the spectacle, paying more than $2,000,000 at the gate. More than sixty special trains are to bring their carloads of fans from all corners of the country and five Governors, hundreds of Congressmen and other public officials are to attend.

TENNIS

The climax of the tennis season is at hand. On Thursday of this week France will engage the United States for the second successive year in the Davis Cup challenge round at Germantown and William Tilden will begin the defense of his crown in the national championship at Forest Hills next Monday.

The strong fears for the safety of the Davis Cup and Tilden's title which were generated by the victories of the French over the champion and Vincent Richards here last Winter have subsided considerably. During the last month Tilden has given reassuring evidence that he has lost none of his mastery, while the performances of the French have not been up to expectations. In neither the interzone match with Japan nor the national doubles did the invaders show anything to give cause for alarm. Allowances must be made, however, for the short period in which they have been in the United States.

Lacoste Likely to Improve.

Rene Lacoste did not seem to be in the best physical condition on his arrival and his play has not been up to his usual standard. Remembering the great improvement that he showed in the challenge round last year after his poor playing against Australia, it is reasonable to expect that he will appear to better advantage this week. Jean Borotra, in spite of the fact that he arrived here later than his teammates, played the best tennis of them all at Boston last week and it appears at this time that he is France's ace.

The victory of Williams and Richards in the doubles championship was in accordance with expectations. When they defeated Tilden and Johnston in two of the four Davis Cup trials they came close to establishing themselves as the strongest team in tennis. Their triumphs over Cochet and Brugnon, the Wimbledon champions, was convincing enough to inspire confidence in their ability to take care of the Davis Cup doubles assignment should they be named.

U. S. Still Favored.

The French players are likely to show to better advantage in the challenge round than they have since their arrival here, and the fact that they have a doubles team separate from their singles players should improve their chances, but the United States, nevertheless, remains the favorite to win the cup for the seventh year in succession.

GOLF

Out of the Upper Montclair Golf Club's first invitation tourney last week came two important developments in the sport—the defeat of Jerome D. Travers and the rise to prominence of Edward Arnott and Bobby Pryor.

Travers, once at the pinnacle of amateur golf in this country, was unable to find his true form all during the Jersey tourney and his defeat did not come as a great surprise after his work on the first two days had been observed. At times he displayed his old genius for putting, and not always were his drives short, but he seemed to be just a shade off the form that once carried him to national honors.

Arnott, in beating Pryor in the final, 3 and 2, played a fine game, but the more important fact is that two boys in their teens have come to the front in the game. The veterans in any sport have to step aside at some time in their careers and it is not always that a sport can furnish young men of capabilities to step into their places. No better indication of the health and vigor of golf is to be found than in the march of these two boys to the final. They showed that they have the competitive spirit, the ability to play steady golf, and with their type increasing, America need not fear the Walker Cup matches of the future.

As usual, the stars playing for the Gold Mashie on T. Suffern Tailer's links are turning in some good golf. The work of young Mackenzie in this event is attracting a great deal of attention. He is playing over a strange course, yet still is able to more than hold his own. For the last few years he has been looked upon as one of the future top notchers and his every tourney brings more enthusiasts to his cause.

Next week Bobby Jones will be the centre of attraction in the golf world, for on Monday he starts out in defense of his American amateur title at Baltusrol. Holder of the British and American open crowns as well as the national amateur, he has an opportunity to add still further to his laurels by capturing the amateur for the third time in a row.

SOCCER

Today marks the test of another touring team in that truly international sport—soccer. The Sparta Club of Prague, Czechoslovakia, will make its début against a picked team of star players from the International League at Ebbets Field, and on the result hangs the future of the invaders in this country. They do not have to win, but they will have to make something better than a fair showing. They and their sponsors, the Chicago A. and B. A., are confident, and it certainly seems that they should be.

No eleven ever has come to this country with a better record. Many of the players on the Sparta team have been together for ten years. They know one another's style of play and through remarkable team work they have been able to defeat every major team on the Continent as well as the Olympic champions. They have sent the Hakoah team of Vienna down to defeat in their last three meetings and they want more worlds to conquer.

The great centre line combination of Kada, Kolenaty and Hajny is reputed to be the fastest in the world, and with Kada setting the pace some great playing should be seen this afternoon. These three have broken through the strongest defending lines of Europe, and it is not unlikely that they will do the same to the heavy last defense men of America.

To those who have seen the Spartans it seems that their one weak spot is the forward line. There the men are light. But they have sacrificed weight for speed. Just what this will avail the Czechs against the great bulk which Americans throw in front of the goal remains to be seen, but the Kada-Kolenaty-Hajny combination is the great offensive weapon of the invaders, and if the forwards can only help to clear the way for these three chargers all will be well for the Sparta men.

News has come to these shores that at the first of next year the Hakoah eleven will invade America again. While several of the players on the former touring eleven have come back and joined American Soccer League teams, the new Hakoah organization is reported to be as strong as the old one.

TURF

The Lawrence Realization Stakes of 1926 will long be a controversial subject. It is unlikely that the admirers of Crusader will accept the result as indicative of the relative merits of the two colts that finished only a head apart after a long and bitter struggle through the stretch. Crusader might have had a better ride. Followers of the son of Man o' War believe that with a Sande on his back Espino would never have been allowed a chance to make his bid as he did when Maiben took a hold on Crusader in the stretch, believing that he had the race won.

But the Realization is a matter of turf history and Espino's name is now inscribed on the rolls of the victors in this three-year-old classic. Nor should any attempt be made to detract from his glory. There is no gainsaying that he is a colt of great class and that no distance is too great for him. He is always coming on at the end, and he comes honestly by his ability to go a route, for Negofol, his sire, is one of the greatest stayers that ever came out of France.

Crusader and Espino probably will not be able to settle their dispute at the current meeting. The former is not entered in the President's Plate, the special for three-year-olds at a mile to be run the last day of the meeting, and the latter was not nominated for the Jerome Handicap next Thursday. Neither is in the Jockey Club Gold Cup, at two miles, next Saturday, although both are eligible for the Twin City Handicap, at a mile and a quarter, on the closing day of the meeting. There is nothing at Aqueduct to give them a test, even if they had been nominated in the handicaps. The plans of the owners of the two colts for the rest of the Autumn campaign are not known, but it is not likely that either will be asked to do much this season.

The return of racing to Belmont Park has been signalized by a renewal of the hue against some so-called objectionable features of the Widener course. However, this opposition is not founded on fact.

The course was constructed after long consideration, upon the best obtainable advice, and when it reaches its highest development it will be without a peer. The horses, whatever the distance, are within full view from every seat in the grand stand and enclosure from the moment the barrier rises until the last contestant pulls up and returns to the scales.

Opposition to the placing of the stand for the finish judges on the side of the course away from the spectators comes from those who are not cognizant of the facts.

The present position of the judges' stand at the end of the Widener course is the only one that is logical and practicable. It corresponds exactly to the position of the stand on the main course, i. e., on the side furthest removed from the inner rail. On the Widener course the rail nearest the grand stand corresponds to the inner rail on the main course, and on the straightaway 99 per cent. of the horses finish closer to that rail—it being instinctive—than to the rail on the side of the judges.

YACHTING

The Star Class Championships, despite the mix-up caused by Thursday's gale, were a brilliant success, winding up with the usual dinner at the Manhasset Bay Yacht Club on Saturday night, at which the prizes were distributed by Commodore Corry, who is known as "father" of the class. This is a most appropriate title, as Commodore Corry, who is now 64 years old, has raced a Star ever since the class came out in 1911 and he now owns the No. 1 boat in the fleet, Little Bear.

There are few gatherings in any line of sport more interesting than the Star Class annual dinner, bringing together as it does skippers and crewmen from far and near. It is naturally a clorful affair and this year had a great addition in the Cuban contingent, the members of which showed themselves good sportsmen all through the series and keen sailors. The leader of the Cubans, Commodore Gorrin of the Havana Yacht Club, is a great enthusiast for the Star boats and said at the dinner: "You must all come to Havana, where the wind is always fair." The Cuban sloops, Gavilan and Lisa, were among the finest-looking vessels of the fleet.

Rhody, the winner, was magnificently sailed at all stages by Ben Comstock, who proved himself as cool as the proverbial "cake of ice" under trying circumstances and carried home a "shipload" of prizes as a result.

Only wonderful organization, made possible through the cooperation of such men as Commodore Corry, Captain John Alwater and Meade Minnegerode, can make such a series a success and these men were among the outstanding aids in the difficult business of putting the event across, not to mention Lieutenant Ralph Hayes of the Coast Guard.

POLO

There is nothing which illustrates more forcefully the strength of the polo season which is rapidly nearing its climax than the fact that Devereux Milburn is a spectator.

In the two first high goal tournaments, the Herbert Memorial and the present one in Philadelphia, the most noted player that America has yet given to the game was on a losing side. True enough, in one instance it lost to the eventual champions and on Saturday to Argentina, but the fact remains an interesting commentary on the strength of the competing field.

Argentina apparently is coming along now. It is the favorite for the Philadelphia tournament and pretty much of one for the championship games at Meadow Brook. The South Americans' mounts apparently are rapidly regaining their best form, and in their best form they are without question a better string than even the famous one which came north in 1922.

Of the Argentinians Jack Nelson is playing the best polo. But the burly, bushy-headed Manuel Andrada, with his mounts in shape as they will be at Meadow Brook, is very apt to prove the sensation of the field. He is a powerful hitter, a hard and fearless rider, and he seems to know polo as it is played today by the best.

The Rumson tournament, which closes today with an exhibition, has been most successful. It has served to show the teams in the high goal tournaments as very nicely matched, that Argentina has sent out another fine team and that polo, properly handled, can and does attract sport lovers in thousands.

One of the reasons for the success of the tourney was in the distinct improvement shown by some of the players over earlier form. Stephen Sanford and Robert E. Strawbridge, two of the younger set, both played sensationally in spots and well up to their handicaps at all times.

SEA BREEZE WINS CHRISCRAFT RACE

JAM NARROWLY AVERTED

Special to The New York Times.

DETROIT, Sept. 5.—All type of power boats from the little outboard motors to the sleek Dodge entries for the sweepstakes, collaborated this afternoon in offering a series of thrills for the second day of Detroit's tenth annual regatta.

When the last boat was ordered from the course, Sea Breeze, a speedy little gentleman's runabout, had taken major honors by leading a large fleet in the annual Chriscraft invitation race. S. E. Potter's craft covered eight laps of the three-mile course in 44:28.67 to average 32.375 miles per hour, but led its closest rival, Karen K, by only a boat length after the twenty-four-mile journey.

This race offered the closest finish of the program, though the rest of the fleet was left far in the rear. Rounding the first buoy at the head of the island after getting the starting signal, Sea Breeze was taken to the front and never lost its advantage. Karen K advanced close enough to make the race interesting, though it was compelled to take wash every lap.

Cruisers Provide Thrill.

The big thrill of the program was offered at the start of the Kermath event, for cruisers, when twenty-five of these craft got the signal to go. Over the line in a bunch, they narrowly avoided a collision when Le-Bobbette, owned by Commodore Mark Hanna, and the largest entry in the race, was caught in the suction of the other craft and pulled crosswise on the course, with several other boats on the straightway.

The Hanna craft headed for the yacht club, with its motors in reverse and only the craftiness of the skippers in the Matthews 38 and Bookie prevented a serious jam. It was stated when the captains finally cleared their craft that the smaller boats had sucked the water from beneath the wheels of Le-Bobbette and there was no alternative for it but head for the dock.

Delmar-Lu Is Victor.

Delmar-Lu, owned by Charles H. Koerber, finally went on to win the six-mile event in 29:08.56 to average 12.353 miles per hour. After the first lap the race narrowed down to a struggle for second place between Sunshine, owned by E. H. Scott of Erie, Pa., and Wag II, owned by Adolph Wagner, with the former gaining the position by a small margin.

Though Bookie, owned by H. A. Buchbinder, finished only fifth, it evened matters by leading a similar fleet in the annual Matthews 38 event, in which ten cruisers competed. To win the Matthews race, Bookie averaged 11.133 miles per hour.

Five more boats, including three Dodge craft, qualified for the 150-mile sweepstakes tomorrow. Miss Syndicate made the best time of the Dodge fleet in two qualifying laps at a speed of 57.823 miles an hour. Watercar-Detroit and Mrs. Delphine Dodge Cromwell's Nuisance were the other Dodge boats to meet requirements.

Cigarette IV, the $60,000 all-metal creation of H. Gordon Hamersley of the Columbia Yacht Club, qualified at 60.261 miles, while Miss Indianapolis bettered 52 miles to gain a place in the race.

CYCLE RACES WASHED OUT.

Two Motor-Paced Events on Card for Tomorrow Night.

Rain caused a postponement of the cycle card at the New York Velodrome last night. However, an attractive program has been arranged for tomorrow night with two motor-paced events as the feature races. The main event will be a three-cornered race among George Chapman, the American champion, Vincent Madonna of Italy and Robert Grassin of France. The race will be decided in ten-mile heats. There also will be a thirty-mile motor-paced event, the Bronx Sweepstakes, which will have seven starters. They will be Victor Hopkins of Iowa, Charley Jaeger of Newark, Charley Verkyn and Henry Wynzdau of Belgium, Dan Pichione and Francesco Zucchetti, Italian riders, and Sammy Gastman.

There also will be a one-mile match race among Orlando Piani of Italy, Willie Spencer, twice American champion, and Freddie Spencer, present champion. There will be three other races on the program.

DRAFTING A GOVERNOR.

One of the happy ideals of popular government is the office seeking the man. This is just now closely approached by the Republican Party of New York. It would appear to contain almost no self-seekers or office-seekers. But the great trouble is that when the office—at least the Governorship—sets out to find the right man to fill it, the man runs away. One eminent citizen after another has been got into a corner by the pursuing office, only to say, "I pray thee, have me excused." Judge TOMPKINS, President BUTLER, Senator ELSBERG and others have let it be known that they could not forsake their private affairs to be elected Governor—especially if Governor SMITH is nominated again.

In these discouraging circumstances the Republican managers have hit upon a brilliant scheme. They are no longer going to implore a leading member of their party to accept the nomination for Governor. They are going to draft him. The thing is to be made compulsory. To this end a sort of decree has been issued that former declinations are no longer to count. They will be simply torn up and thrown into the capacious waste-basket at Republican headquarters. When the State Convention meets three weeks from now, the fact that a man has positively refused to stand as a candidate will not prevent the issue of a writ by the party commanding him to accept on pain of being tried for treason or shot at sunrise. This is expected to stop the depressing effect of the many Republican declinations, which inevitably give the impression that the Republican nomination for Governor is not this year exactly equivalent to election.

There is to be one exemption from the compulsory draft. It will not be applied to Mr. HUGHES. He took the precaution of saying in writing that not only would he not be a candidate for Governor, but that if he were nominated by his party he would not accept. This is held to free him from arrest and punishment as a rebel against the draft. But all others have been served with a notice that this is no time to disobey a party mandate, even if it order a member to verify the prediction of WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE that the Republicans of New York are in for a "good licking."

Meanwhile, it is interesting to note that Senator WADSWORTH does not intend to act as a Republican boss in this State. He has the majority of the State Convention already in his trousers pocket, but he would not think of dictating what must be done. He will confine himself to making "recommendations." But it is generally expected, and is even gravely stated by writers on politics, that they will be carried out. If they are not, several delegates and a few local leaders will be carried out—and politically buried.

LOCARNO CONSUMMATED.

The Treaties of Locarno, hailed last December as of epoch-making importance, are now to become operative as a result of Germany's admission to the League of Nations. It is "one big thing done," to use a phrase of Viscount GREY'S. It is also a momentous thing done. The "New Europe" actually comes into sight. England, France and Germany are now in pact to keep the peace of a continent, and, it may be said, of the world. Not that war has been outlawed, but the circumstances under which war is legitimate have been so clearly defined as to do all that is possible to prevent warlike conditions from arising and to dissipate them if they do. The security that was sought by France against Germany through a post-war guarantee from England and America has been assured by an agreement to which Germany is a party, together with Great Britain, France, Belgium, Poland and Czechoslovakia. To it all Christendom is a witness.

The door is now open to the three things which the nations of Europe have sought and in which they have unavailingly asked our assistance: First of all, security; second, the judicial process, and, third, disarmament. In the Locarno Treaties the nations of Europe have taken "the longest possible step" toward the establishment of security. That is attested by the agreement to submit all future disputes to judicial methods as an alternative for armed force. These policies having the support of the individual and collective pledges of the peoples with a will to peace, it will be possible to proceed to disarmament among themselves and to plans for protection against those who are not willing to join in these agreements.

That this could have come without the League is inconceivable. Under its aegis the natives of Europe may turn their thoughts more hopefully to their own affairs without the haunting fear of aggression across their borders. As one said who wrote to BRIAND after Locarno: Mothers will be able to look at their children without apprehension and to love them with some security. Peoples will be free to work out their own salvation in fear and trembling only if the unjust thing is done in the eyes of an omnipresent agency of international justice and right.

LAFAYETTE'S SESQUICENTENNIAL

There is a special reason for celebrating this year the anniversary of the birth of LAFAYETTE—the 6th of September, 1757—for it is the sesquicentennial of the enlistment of his heart in the cause of American independence. CHARLEMAGNE TOWER fixes the date of the original resolve to go to America as 1775, for it was in that year that the Duke of GLOUCESTER paused at Metz, where LAFAYETTE was stationed with his regiment, and at a dinner spoke freely in criticism of the treatment of the Colonies by his brother, King GEORGE III, and in sympathy with these "remote, scattered "and unprotected settlers of the wilder-"ness." But it was in 1776 that LAFAYETTE'S purpose matured into definite plans; and before his twentieth birthday had come (1777) he had quitted the gayest court in Europe, and, risking his life and fortune, had purchased a vessel and set out for America, landed on the coast of South Carolina, made his way in spite of great difficulties to Philadelphia, and here had besought Congress to let him serve without pay as the first volunteer. His service and the succor he brought lie in the next half century, and while his inestimable contribution to the success of the struggle is not to be forgotten, this year the first proffer of this gallant young son of France is especially to be remembered.

When the news from America was more and more discouraging and reports were current that WASHINGTON'S army was annihilated, the American Commissioners sought to dissuade him from going, but he replied: "Let us "not give up all hope yet; it is pre-"cisely in the time of danger that I "want to share whatever fortune may "have in store for you." While every possible obstacle was put in his way by the French Government, which was obliged to take official notice of a movement hostile to Great Britain, with whom France was then at peace, the people knowing of his exploit were sympathetic and the King had secretly made a grant of 2,000,000 livres in aid of the Colonies; and such was his generosity, as BENJAMIN FRANKLIN and SILAS DEAN wrote to the Committee of Secret Correspondence for the Colonies, that "he exacted no conditions or promise of repayment." It will be said that it was for France's own advantage that she should show such helpful sympathy, but of LAFAYETTE it may be said that he was moved "by his own inspiration."

It was in Philadelphia before his next birthday (his twentieth) that the youthful LAFAYETTE first saw General WASHINGTON, at a dinner at which both were guests. From that night is dated one of the great and significant friendships of history—a friendship that has probably done more to bind and keep the peoples of the two nations in a deep sympathetic relationship that survives all surface disturbances than any one other event or influence. A month later LAFAYETTE rode by the side of WASHINGTON through the streets of Philadelphia in a march, designed to encourage the friends of liberty, whose route and tempo were prescribed in this general order issued by WASHINGTON:

> The army is to march in one column through the City of Philadelphia, going in at and marching down Front Street to Chestnut and up Chestnut to the Common. • • • The drums and fifes of each brigade are to be collected in the centre of it and a time for the quickstep played, but with such moderation that the men may step to it with ease and without dancing along or totally disregarding the music, as has been too often the case.

This was but a few days before LAFAYETTE came to his next birthday, and so, in what may be called with propriety his sesquicentennial year, he took part in this memorable march with the American soldiers wearing sprigs of green in their hats, who "in spite of their nakedness," which he himself later helped out of his own funds to clothe, "presented a creditable appearance." A few days later he was wounded in a gallant action in the Battle of Brandywine, and from being a foreigner, and stranger, was welcomed that night in the American camp "as a tried friend and a comrade."

The gift of the King was never repaid; and as for LAFAYETTE'S gift, it can never be. Without it and what it brought later of substantial aid the some time Colonies would not now be celebrating the sesquicentennial of their independence.

GETTING RID OF GRADE CROSSINGS

The report that the last grade crossings in Manhattan will be eliminated by the end of this year, and that those still remaining in the other boroughs of the city will soon follow, points again to the necessity for pushing this work in all the territory surrounding the city. The great obstacle is the expense. Under the present laws the railroad companies bear half and the State and municipal authorities each one-quarter of the total cost. An idea of the enormous labor involved may be gathered from the fact that the Long Island Railroad has during the last twenty-five years eliminated 316 grade crossings, but still has 639 to be dealt with. It does not follow that all of these need be removed in the near future. But the development of the Long Island countryside as a holiday ground as well as a great residential district means that the number of automobiles will increase, thus deepening not only the dangers of grade crossings but also the annoyance due to traffic delays. What is true of Long Island is also true of the neighboring Jersey country, though less so of Westchester.

A recent ruling prevents the railroads from using the plea of lack of available funds as a justification for delaying the removal work. They have to bear the expense, even if they risk bankruptcy. Fortunately the State and municipal authorities are aware of the strain which this places on the companies' finances, and are working out a plan for removing the most dangerous or obstructive crossings first. Public necessity is compelling. The work must be pushed as rapidly as possible.

Here in the city one stretch alone will remain unimproved pending the final outcome of the negotiations. This is the so-called "Death Avenue" along the Hudson River front. About this there has long been a vigorous battle. No one questions that it is at once a danger and a nuisance. But the adjustment of old rights of way is a delicate problem. Naturally neither the city nor the railroad wishes to undertake expenses which can be legally avoided. In Jamaica there has been delay owing to a dispute whether the city or the railroad should pay for the purchase of the necessary adjoining land in order to build the approaches. These are but samples of the technical obstacles in the way of this work. In spite of similar difficulties elsewhere, the program is being carried out as rapidly as circumstances permit. The bond issue authorized by the State to carry out this work will more than repay the people in safety and convenience.

THE SPANISH PLEBISCITE.

Two different views may be taken of the action of PRIMO DE RIVERA in directing that a plebiscite be held in Spain a week from now. It may be argued that this is only an ingenious method of confirming himself in power as virtual Dictator of Spain. With his control of the administrative machinery and with his own appointees holding office in so many localities throughout Spain, it may be said that it will be easy for him to produce an apparent majority in his own favor. NAPOLEON III showed in France how easy it is for a plebiscite to be "rigged." At that time it was reported by an English observer that a common saying among French peasants was: "We need a master." Perhaps they will be saying that in Spain—or be made to appear to say it. On the other hand, they may say that they have had enough of a master during the past three years, and would now like a taste of political liberty.

The sounder opinion considers this concession by the Spanish Dictator as a sign that he is conscious of growing weakness, and of a position actually endangered. Despite the strict censorship in Spain, enough news has leaked out to show that PRIMO DE RIVERA'S lot during the past few months has been increasingly happy. The most serious domestic threat to his power would lie in the reported disaffection of the army. If he cannot control that, he is lost. Apparently he has been endeavoring to set over against disappointments at home some brilliant achievements in foreign policy. The signing of the treaty with Italy was a great stroke for him, but it seemingly led him on to other attempts to win for Spain glory abroad which have rather dismally failed. One was the demand that Tangier be in effect turned over completely to Spanish control. This has been denied him. The other was the ambitious effort to secure for Spain a permanent seat on the Council of the League of Nations. This weapon to secure heightened prestige also broke in his hand. Nothing was left for him but to signify Spain's "dignified abstention" from the meetings of the League this year. That may be a fetching way for the time being of appealing to Spanish sticklers for the "point of honor," which has always meant so much to the national temperament and character, but that path of duty, if it be such, does not promise to turn out for Spain the path of glory.

However interpreted, and whatever its true aim, the appeal to the people in Spain is one proof more that dictatorships cannot at this age of the world destroy the ideas and institutions of democratic government. In the end the people will insist upon being consulted by their rulers from time to time. They may give very foolish advice. Their decisions may seem only to make matters worse. But, after all, the avowed aim of even the most rigid dictator is to make the people contented. If it is demonstrated that they will not be long content without having their consent asked, then it will have to be asked. That, we believe, is the true significance of what is occurring in Spain.

THE STRIKE IN THE MOVIES.

When the stage hands had difficulties with the theatre managers in New York, there was no talk of a twenty-minute rest period in every hour for temperamental artists. The men stated directly that they wanted more money. If the managers felt that the demand was based solely on a wrong estimate of ability to pay, they could do their own sugar-coating of a bitter pill. This simple candor is very different from the attitude of the Chicago musicians of the theatre, who have started a walkout that has spread all over the country. But there is one point in which the two organizations are much alike.

Both feel their power to compel employment of members of the union. Incompetent men or a greater number than the manager would engage if the matter were left to his judgment are forced on him, according to statements from his side of the controversy. From coast to coast producers have been heard to complain because they are required by stage hands to hire a certain number to do the work, and a few more to play checkers. A disinterested person, a dramatic critic who has enjoyed the hospitality of theatrical managers and, when the performance was boring, played checkers with the stage hands, is able to see justice in the protests against this. If he is prejudiced, it may be because the stage hands beat him at the game.

The musicians are striking for a wage increase of about $5 a week. Certain other of their demands are given out by the other camp. In a small motion picture theatre, where the manager thinks an organ can supply music, he finds that the union is trying to force an orchestra on him. The fact that he says the theatre cannot afford an orchestra makes no difference. This statement comes from the President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. Another rule which the musicians are trying to enforce would oblige theatres to maintain musicians fifty-two weeks after they have served two successive weeks. The league of operators would be unable to discharge a musician for incompetence, or any other cause which might possibly not appear, until after a fortnight's service.

Motion picture audiences insist on music with their movies. The consciousness of this public demand strengthens the union in its threats. But the musicians are apparently quite unconscious of another fact. The fiddlers and saxophone players are not the only source of melody in the modern world. The new perfection of synchronized music and picture reels has been much talked of recently. Modern invention is perhaps not quite ready to provide a synthetic orchestra at a moment's notice, but the union shoud not be too much surprised if it is done in a few weeks. In an age of artificial substitutes, a manufactured orchestra is not an impossibility.

SUCCESS BY SURVIVAL.

ERNST VIERKOETTER, whose record in British waters is much better than that of the late German High Seas Fleet, is reported by the Berlin correspondent of THE TIMES to have smiled somewhat cynically when tumultuous crowds welcomed him home to Berlin and popped champagne corks in his honor. If the conquerer of the Channel succeeded in getting home, it was through the kindness of a British jockey who took him to the German frontier in his motor car. VIERKOETTER himself lacked the necessary car fare. His swim was almost prevented by the want of $25. That is why he smiled when exhilarated admirers asked why he had not written home for money. They would have been glad to send him any amount—after the event.

It is permissible to smile over the incident, but one need not proceed to build up thereon an entire philosophy of pessimism dealing with human motive. If people will always rally to the side of the victor, it is also true that people will frequently grubstake the unknown pioneer. And, after all, what would victory mean if the way to it were always made smooth and pleasant? If every aspirant for trans-Channel fame could go to the bank and borrow on his hopes, if every inventor found a generous backer, if every new prophet found immediate acceptance, the Channel would be crowded with swimmers who had no excuse for being there, the Patent Office would be swamped with nightmares and truck, and humanity would be submerged under a flood of wild heresies. Adversity is, in a rough way, the test of truth, and victory is peculiarly victory because it has been won in the face of discouragement.

No doubt it would be an excellent thing if we were gifted with an infallible intuition which would enable us to discern genius and truth before they had proved themselves. But in the absence of such foreknowledge it is perhaps best for the world that merit and truth should be required to establish their title against heavy odds. That is the only way we have for eliminating the spurious and the pretentious. It is conceivable that village Hampdens and mute inglorious Miltons have been the victims of lack of opportunity. But it is easily demonstrable that a universal subsidy system would clutter up the world with pseudo-Hampdens and brummagem Miltons. It is easy enough, and in a sense fair enough, to point out how one generation has hastened to honor what a preceding generation rejected. But it is also fair to remember that for every genius so rejected probably a thousand impostors and pretenders have been summarily disposed of. For every true prophet burned at the stake a hundred vicious absurdities have been profitably suppressed. Today we are possibly inclined to be a bit too afraid of being laughed at by future generations. We are too ready to be tolerant of charlatans because of what happened in the case of KEATS and WHISTLER.

A WELL-GRACED VETERAN.

In CHARLES HOPKINS CLARK the old Yankee sap still ran strong. Cultivated and traveled as he was, a pillar of great newspaper, business and educational institutions, constantly studious of and active in local, State and national affairs, quick to seize changes that commended themselves to his reason, open-minded and broad-minded in most respects, he had something of the solid conservatism of his ancestors who trekked from the Massachusetts to the Connecticut Newtown. His essential quality, outside of politics, where, indeed, it doesn't enter too often, was what they (valuing it above most other things) would have called "judgement." Its sobriety and ripeness made him as valuable as his personal characteristics made him a beloved officer of The Associated Press. The same faculty shone in him as a member of the Yale Corporation—perhaps the most treasured dignity a Yalensian can reach. His old friend, Chief Justice TAFT, will hardly deny that.

Born in Hartford, that beautiful and ancient city which has not lost in growth and prosperity its stately memories and traditions, Mr. CLARK was fortunate and strong enough worthily to continue and to improve notably one of the most famous of monuments. Coming at 23 to The Courant, our oldest newspaper of consecutive publication; trained under eminences, political and literary; he was to serve it for fifty-five years; as editor-in-chief and publisher for thirty-five. He educated his staff. No diminution of the character and influence of his paper is to be expected. It will keep on as colleges keep on. It will inherit the endowments, it will bear the impress, of Mr. CLARK. So his work survives him.

An accomplished modern newspaper, The Courant preserves on its editorial page a tang, a peculiar flavor, an individuality, almost a philosophy of its own. Mr. CLARK'S Puritan orthodoxy took the form of political orthodoxy. He was for the Grand Old Party, right or wrong. He stood for and by the machine. He pounded Republican Governors bearing the wrong stamp. Republican statesmen that dared to dissent. This attitude is getting to be somewhat of a survival, at least in city newspapers. It has its merits, like a partisan historian. We are bound to say that Mr. CLARK and his associates made politics entertaining. This was particularly the case in State matters. Against the always iniquitous Democrats and Independents, against rambunctious and inconvenient Republican candidates, The Courant shows a playful irony. It is amused—and amuses—rather than pained.

So Mr. CLARK, regular and regulator, while perfectly sincere in his beliefs and true to the Johnsonian determination about the Whig dogs, probably enjoyed his opponents as much as the discerning among them enjoyed him. One more Yankee trait: like DANIEL WEBSTER, Mr. CLARK was an incurable fisherman. He must have loved to go fishing even more than he loved going to a National Republican Convention. Well, his busy, fruitful day, rich in achievement, richer in friendships, is done:

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Simplicity of the Kansas K. K. K.

Even students of the osteocephalic index of the Ku Klux Klan may be surprised by a recent discovery in Kansas. Mr. MAURICE MURPHY is the Democratic nominee for Attorney General. His religion and his very name should make him taboo to the White-Sheet Phalanx. To fill up his measure of iniquity he is a Knight of Columbus. In the course of his primary campaign the Farmers' Union asked him what he would do if members of it applied, in the regular and legal form, for a charter for a State bank.

Mr. MURPHY, who was not born yesterday, replied skillfully that he would be in favor of a charter to members of the union or anybody else, if "the applicant is entitled to it." He would favor granting the charter, if the applicant was entitled to one, "regardless of who the person or organization may be." It seems incredible, but we have the word of The Emporia Gazette for it, that "members of the Ku Klux Klan and their friends, allies and associated powers are quoting parts of this letter from Mr. MURPHY in the hope of getting votes for Mr. MURPHY. They are vainly trying to make it appear that when he says he would give a charter to a Farmers' Union bank he is really saying he would give a charter to the Ku Klux Klan."

Holy simplicity! Hear Mr. WHITE gibe:

A Mirror Room Wanted in Parliament.

The women members of the British House of Commons have filed a protest because they do not like their quarters. All six of them conclude their general statement that the rooms are "simply horrid" with an emphatic objection to the one small mirror with which they are supplied. They demand improvements, not in the form of a larger mirror, but six of them.

These could be distributed at judicious angles and distances, so that when Lady ASTOR was powdering her nose in front of one, there would still be one each left for the others. Moreover, with six an arrangement could be effected whereby both profiles, the back and a couple of three-quarter views might all be seen at once.

The Westminster Gazette wonders what GLADSTONE or DISRAELI would think if they knew that Members of Parliament were grumbling because of a dearth of mirrors. Those great men were well enough aware of masculine vanity. If the rooms allotted to the men are not plentifully supplied with mirrors, it is not because they are not wanted, but because the men are ashamed, timid, or too vain to ask for them.

Checking Up on Degeneration.

Sir W. ARBUTHNOT LANE did not say that the Zulu tribesmen were the most perfect men in the world, as the headlines state it. The famous British surgeon said that the Zulu, before he was exposed to white contamination, was perhaps the most perfect "human animal."

Care in the use of figures is urged by another British physician, this time Sir JAMES STEWART, neurologist, now a visitor in this country. Sir JAMES, according to The World, refused to admit that there has been an increase in insanity during recent years in Great Britain. "I do not think it is a matter of increase, but a more complete recognition of insanity, and therefore more statistics." It is a factor to be reckoned with in our own recurrent alarms about the growing population in the insane asylums.

Consider also the alleged disproportionate number of alien insane in our asylums. Economic and social standards enter into the problem. A larger proportion of the newly arrived foreign-born than of the native population would be compelled by economic stress to make use of the public institutions for mental ailments. Our native tradition of self-sufficiency prefers the family doctor to the public hospitals and clinics. Insanity statistics, like crime statistics, must take into account the fact that crime, like insanity, is partly created by definition.

Serrano a Man of Courage.

Mexico, whose politicians have so often settled disputes with the pistol in public and even in the halls of Congress, is not the country where one would expect condemnation of the duello. Coming from General SERRANO it is all the more astonishing. Although Governor of the Federal District, he might fight a duel with the approval of army officers. The law would probably look the other way in Mexico. But SERRANO does not care who knows that he is opposed to dueling.

Challenged to the field of honor by Prince PIGNATELLI of the Italian Legation, General SERRANO declared that duels are ridiculous and that the duellist should be punished by the courts.

The fire-eating Italian Prince, who boasts of being a descendant of CORTEZ, has only succeeded in getting himself laughed at. His challenge appeared in a newspaper, but everybody, except perhaps the General's enemies, thinks it was funny. Certainly the language used by the diplomat in defense of his "honor" belied his sense of humor. General SERRANO'S attitude toward dueling is not only courageous, but an example in Mexico for all public men.

She Loves New York.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

This is my second visit to your city—"the City of Wonders." My amazement grows as I go from one place to another. The people are no less wonderful. One never sees any sign of impatience or unkindness. The policemen, car, taxi and bus drivers all personify patience.

The cards in public conveyances asking for help in saving life are touching. The care and regard for life is godly. If any one doubts this, let him visit the Coney Island incubator exhibition and see how the tiny sparks from the great flame of life are being cared for and coaxed to continue existence.

The building of subways, where men go into the very bowels of the earth, and the skyscrapers, where they are at the portals of Heaven, never cease to make me exclaim, "End there is none" to the efforts and accomplishments of man! I love New York.

SERVICE AT THE LIBRARY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A correspondent whose letter appeared in THE TIMES last Sunday protested because applicants for cards at the central circulation branch of the New York Public Library are asked to register at the branches in neighborhoods in which they live or work.

The size of the building at Forty-second Street and Fifth Avenue frequently causes a misunderstanding of the resources of the central circulation branch. The building is primarily for reference use, with only a small proportion of the books available for circulation. A bulletin posted at the application desk gives the following facts, which your correspondent evidently failed to read:

1. Central circulation is not a main circulating library in the sense of having a tremendous book supply, but is one of forty-four branches of the circulation department of the New York Public Library.

2. Applicants are asked to apply for cards at the branches nearest their homes.

3. A card from any other branch of the New York Public Library may be used at the central circulation branch.

4. The chance of finding late popular fiction at central circulation is slight, since proportionately less fiction is bought than for the other branches. Contrary to the general policy of the other branches, it is impossible to reserve fiction.

The branch was established for the convenience of people who live and work in the immediate neighborhood and for readers from other branches who wish to supplement the resources of those branches. There is no space within the present building to expand circulating facilities.

The librarian at the registration desk is there to direct inquirers to the other branches, of which facilities inquirers frequently do not know, and to suggest that in several ways, such as personal service and the reserving of fiction, the other branches offer greater advantages.

It is only by such decentralization that proper service can be given by the central circulation branch to its borrowers, including the members of other branches of the New York Public Library, who use it when they wish special books.

If such limitations were not made, the branch would have its membership increased from the present ninety thousand to several hundred thousand. The single room in which its activities are conducted would not resemble a library but, rather, the shuttle at the rush hour, crowded with discontented would-be readers unable to get books or service. Fire Danger on Ferryboats.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Having recently had occasion to ferry at different points and at different times from New Jersey to Manhattan, I have been impressed with the danger lurking in the oil and gasoline soaked wooden floors of ferry-boats.

"No Smoking" signs of many sizes are prominently displayed on all boats, but motors are hardly quiet before out come innumerable cigarettes, cigars and pipes. Matches are lighted and flicked hither and yon. A fatal fire is sure to occur some day.

Could not the deckhands, instead of loafing during the trip across the river, use that time to enforce the "No Smoking" rule—among themselves first and then among bus drivers, chauffeurs and other passengers? H. I. SCHERMER.

A "Ball of Fire" In New Jersey.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

At the height of a recent thunderstorm I was in the kitchen of my house in Elizabeth, N. J. On the gas stove was an iron preserving pot. The windows were open, but in each was a wire screen. A ball of fire about five inches in diameter came in at one of the windows, crossed the room to the iron pot and disappeared without any noise. MARY-LOUISE CLARK DIX.

CHEMISTS SAY AIM IS TO BRING PEACE

HONOR JOSEPH PRIESTLEY

Scientists Gather at Northumberland (Pa.) to Dedicate Museum to Discoverer of Oxygen.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 5 (AP).—A closer working alliance among the chemists of all nations in the interest of peace and human welfare is the chief mission of the foreign scientists, speakers asserted tonight at a meeting of European chemists.

The meeting, at which the agenda for the convention of the International Union of Pure and Applied Chemistry to be held in Washington was discussed was attended by many of the foreign delegates to the golden jubilee conclave of the American society, which opens here tomorrow.

Heads of national scientific bodies and representatives of industries and universities of nearly every country are here for the conclave.

Many of the delegates made a pilgrimage today to Northumberland, Pa., where a museum in honor of Joseph Priestley, discoverer of oxygen, was dedicated. Upon their return to this city groups of foreign and American chemists met to develop plans for world-wide cooperation in science.

Speaking for the chemists of France Professor Gabriel Bertrand, research worker of the University of Paris, asserted that science was not interested in promoting the use of chemistry in war, but that the chemists of all nations were bending their efforts toward the pursuits of peace.

He declared that French chemists were utilizing poison gases on the farms and in the vineyards "with no thought of warfare."

Professor Bertrand said there was no "real" anti-American feeling in France, which, he declared, cherished only the warmest friendship for America.

The French delegation includes Paul Sabatier, member of the Faculty of the University of Toulouse; Camille Matignon, Vice President of the Society of Industrial Chemistry; Charles Lormand, auditor of the Superior Council of Hygiene of France; Jean Voisin, Assistant General Secretary of the Marcelin Berthelot Committee; Justin DuPont, perfume manufacturer, and Senator M. Brangier.

Delegations from Rumania, Russia, Holland, Great Britain, Germany, Japan and Spain were among today's arrivals.

Dr. Browne Lauds Priestley.

NORTHUMBERLAND, Pa., Sept. 5—Pilgrims of chemistry assembled from many lands at the home of Joseph Priestley today heard the discoverer of oxygen acclaimed, more than century after his death, as a precursor of Anglo-American unity and as one whose career refutes the theory that science destroys religion.

Priestley's flight from England to America and Count Rumford's flight from America to England were declared by Dr. Charles A. Browne, Chief of the United States Bureau of Chemistry, to be "our first international exchange of scientists," accomplished by violence.

In an address on "Priestley's Life," Dr. Browne eulogized Priestley as "one of the world's greatest truth-seekers, resembling closely in love of science, in spirit of liberalism, in political opinion and in versatility Benjamin Franklin, between whom and Priestley the warmest friendship existed."

The purpose of the Priestley Museum, dedicated today, is not, Dr. Browne said, to glorify the accomplishments of Priestley, but to perpetuate a knowledge of his life and character.

"His career," Dr. Browne asserted, "is a refutation of the false idea, so commonly expressed, that the pursuit of science is destructive of religion. Love for science and devotion to religion were so combined in him that his scientific writings are permeated with a spirit of lofty reverence."

S. A. Goldschmidt and A. A. Breneman of New York City, surviving members of a group of chemists which met at the Priestley home in 1874 and conceived the idea of forming the society, spoke on "The Birth of the American Chemical Society at the Priestley House in 1874."

LABOR WATCHING TWO BILLS

Congress Expected to Act in December on Compensation Laws.

Congress will take final action at the December session upon two bills, covering more than a third of a million workers, which "aim to close up a conspicuous gap in American accident compensation legislation," the American Association for Labor Legislation, 131 East Twenty-third Street, announced last night.

The Cummins-Graham bill would provide Federal accident compensation for longshoremen, ship repairmen and other harbor workers; while the Fitzgerald bill would give similar protection to wage-earners in private employment in the District of Columbia, according to the association.

With these exceptions, labor in all the States, except six in the non-industrial South, now enjoy the benefits of compensation laws, the association found. In Missouri the workmen's compensation act of 1925 will be submitted to a referendum vote at the November election, and in Florida a bill of similar purpose will be presented to the next Legislature with the joint backing of labor and employers.

LABOR COURSES ANNOUNCED

Two Series of Free Lectures Will Be Given at the New School.

Persons desiring to study the progress of the labor movement may attend two evening lecture courses at the New School of Social Research, 455 West Twenty-third Street, Dr. Alvin Johnson, director, announced yesterday. Each course will be given once a week at 8:20 P. M., beginning Oct. 4. Registration is open to all and admissions to single lectures may be obtained, Dr. Johnson said.

Leo Wolman, in charge of the Research Department of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, will conduct a course on "The Labor Movement in the National Life," while "The Rise of the Modern Labor Movement in England and the United States" will be the topic of a course by Norman J. Ware, Impartial Chairman of the Rochester (N. Y.) Men's Clothing Industry.

C. HOPKINS CLARK, NOTED EDITOR, DEAD

Headed The Hartford Courant Staff, Which He Joined More Than Fifty Years Ago.

REFUSED AMBASSADORSHIP

An Associated Press Director, a Prominent Republican and Loyal Son of Yale.

HARTFORD, Conn., Sept. 5 (AP).—Charles Hopkins Clark, editor of The Hartford Courant, died at 8:20 o'clock, Standard Time, tonight at his home here, after an illness of several months, a general breakdown of the system due to advancing years. A cerebral hemorrhage at 1 A. M today was the immediate cause of death, Mr. Clark remaining unconscious from that hour to the end. He was in has seventy-ninth year.

Mr. Clark's health had been failing for years, but he continued to be the active head of the corporation and directed the newspaper until Jan. 21, last, when he asked to be taken home, realizing that he was too ill to go on with the day's tasks at his desk. On the next day his life was despaired of. It was believed for some time that death might come at any moment. He rallied, however, sufficiently to be taken out of the country in his automobile and to talk with friends who visited him. Early in July Mr. Clark was taken to his Summer home at Madison, but before long he returned to his Hartford residence.

Enters Journalism by Chance.

Charles Hopkins Clark's advent into journalism was by chance. His first ambition after graduating from Yale in 1871 was to teach school. He applied for employment in Chicago and failed to obtain a position.

One night in the Fall of 1871 the young man asked for work at The Hartford Courant editorial rooms. The associate editors, Charles Dudley Warner and General Joseph R. Hawley, were in sore need of assistance. Their one reporter had absented himself without permission. The news of the big Chicago fire was trickling in over the telegraph wire and the office was a busy place. Young Clark took off his coat to assume "temporary position," and thus began the association which continued throughout his life.

Mr. Clark's first night in a newspaper office remained one of his most vivid memories through the many crowded years that followed. As the bulletins of the fire came into the office, he traced the devastated areas on a map. At his elbow were the presidents of the Hartford fire insurance companies, who were trying to compute the companies' losses.

Throughout his life Mr. Clark served no other newspaper. He advanced through the various positions to President of The Hartford Courant Company and editor-in-chief of The Courant, which is the oldest paper in the United States in point of consecutive publication, having been established as The Connecticut Courant, a weekly, by Thomas Green on Oct. 29, 1764.

Lived in New York as a Boy.

Mr. Clark was born in Hartford on April 1, 1848. Except for a few boyhood years which he spent in New York, where he attended Grammar School 35 and later the Free Academy, now the College of the City of New York, he made Hartford his home for the rest of his life. His keen interest in education, politics, business and journalism was indicated by his membership in the corporation of Yale University and on the boards of insurance and industrial Corporations, his high honors in the Republican Party and his repeated election as director of The Associated Press.

He was the son of Ezra Clark, a prosperous business man who was twice sent to Congress, and of Mary Hopkins Clark. After completing his education at Hartford High School he entered Yale University.

Two years after his graduation at Yale he married Miss Ellen Root of Hartford. Two children were born, Horace B. Clark and Mary H. Clark, wife of H. K. W. Welch of Hartford. Mrs. Clark died in 1895 and in 1899 Mr. Clark married Matilda C. Root, a sister of his first wife.

Develops Rapidly.

As a beginner in journalism young Clark developed rapidly under the capable guidance of General Hawley and Mr. Warner. They recognized the young man's facile mind, his wit and his loyalty. General Hawley was a veteran political writer who had served as Governor and who later became a United States Senator. Mr. Warner was inclined to literature and the fine arts. They and the young editor they were training were producing one of the most influential Republican newspapers in the country.

Mr. Clark fell heir to much of General Hawley's work when the latter entered the Senate. Mr. Warner died in 1900, and thereafter the full responsibility for the paper rested on Mr. Clark's shoulders. General Hawley survived until 1905, but he had retired many years before from active management of the paper.

On assuming full charge Mr. Clark was anxious to develop The Courant as fast as possible. All fields of human interest were reported as rapidly as expanding telegraphic facilities could be brought to bear upon them. His mind was always open for what was new and he made quick decisions.

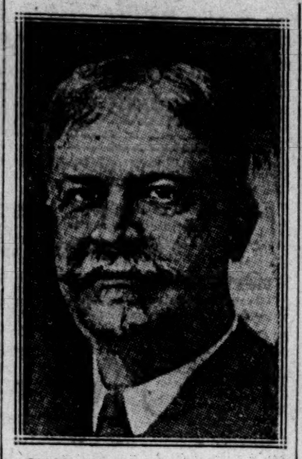
Mr. Clark's policy was to share with his co-workers the benefits of ownership of the company's stock. From time to time he helped those in his employ to buy shares.

For many years after he had succeeded to the active management of The Courant Mr. Clark spent most of his day at his desk and often worked far into the evening. His memory was phenomenal and, although there was great pressure on him for advice and suggestions, he was never too busy to listen.

In 1906-1907 Mr. Clark was lecturer at Yale of the Isaac H. Bromley Lectureship Foundation. His lectures were on journalism as a profession and a public service. They were printed and widely commented upon by writers.

Under Mr. Clark The Courant broadened, and in 1913 a Sunday edition was issued. It was not certain that the seven-day service would prove a financial success, but the venture soon proved profitable. The Sunday edition continued to grow from year to year and Mr. Clark constantly added features.

His interest in politics continued throughout his life. He began attending the national conventions of the Republican Party when Benjamin Harrison was nominated in 1888. From that time on he served regularly as a delegate-at-large from Connecticut in conventions, including that at Cleveland in 1924.



CHARLES HOPKINS CLARK,
Editor of The Hartford Courant, who died yesterday.

High in Associated Press.

The Associated Press elected Mr. Clark a director in 1910 and re-elected him for succeeding terms. He served on the Executive Committee. His loyalty to The Associated Press was just as pronounced as that to his own paper. He emphasized the idea that The Courant was not merely a receiving station for Associated Press news, but that it was a full partner in The Associated Press.

For a time he was a member of the Board of Directors of the Connecticut Civil Service Reform Association, as the theory of the merit system appealed to him. But he lost his faith in civil service when he saw how it worked out in many cases, and resigned from the reform association. Thereafter he advocated the repeal of Connecticut's civil service law, and this was accomplished by the Legislature in 1921. His basic objection to civil service was that it frequently put into the employ of men who were responsible for high positions of public trust assistants who were not in sympathy with them and whose qualifications were not satisfactory to the responsible officials. He was also a member of a commission created by the Legislature to study the direct primary, the conclusion of the commission being that the idea was attractive in theory but unsound in practice.

Besides being a Fellow of Yale University, as a member in its corporation is known, he was a director of the Phenix Fire Insurance Company, the Connecticut Mutual Fire Insurance Company, the Travelers' Insurance Company and the Collins Company, and Treasurer of the Watkinson Library and Wadsworth Athenaeum of Hartford, the last named a museum containing many historical treasures of the Colonial period. He also was a director of the Connecticut Reformatory at Cheshire since its establishment.

Went With Taft to Orient.

Mr. Clark was fond of travel. With Charles Dudley Warner he went through Mexico to the Isthmus of Tehuantepec and with the late Sir William Van Horne toured Cuba, Guatemala and Costa Rica and went through the Culebra Cut of the Panama Canal before the water was let in. He was a close friend of Chief Justice William Howard Taft, and when Mr. Taft was Secretary of War made with him his longest trip, going to Cuba, Japan and the Philippine Islands.

Reporters on The Courant had a stock of stories of Mr. Clark and his strict journalistic ethics. One used to tell how, as a beginner, he wrote a news story with editorial opinions. Mr. Clark called him to his office and said: "Now, Mr. ——, I may get to the point where I need some assistance in writing editorials, and when I do I shall be glad to call upon you for help; but until I do, don't write any more." The reporter was not guilty of the offense again.

On another occasion a man employed by The Courant had failed to appreciate what had been done for him in his hour of need and continued in certain habits. It was suggested to Mr. Clark that he be discharged, but the editor asked, "What is he going to do if we let him go?" and the man stayed.

In the Spring of 1924 Mr. Clark fell while fishing and broke a bone in his shoulder. For many months he carried on his work in Hartford, New Haven and New York, generally assisted by an attendant. His last appearance in the office of The Courant was on Jan. 21, 1926, but he was so weak that he could not continue his work and was assisted into his automobile and left the office which for more than fifty-four years had been his second home.

Fishing was one of Mr. Clark's chief diversions. When on his seventy-sixth birthday he arrived at his office an hour late, some one jokingly referred to his tardiness, whereupon Mr. Clark explained that he had started from home on time, but that he had dropped in at the City Hall for his fishing license and then at the polls to vote.

Mr. Clark was a member of several clubs—the Century, University and Yale of New York, the Good Will and the Graduates of New Haven, the Hartford, the Metabetchouan Fish and Game of Canada, and the White Hollow Game and Fish.

Refused Two Posts From Taft.

Like Mr. Taft, Mr. Clark was a member of Skull and Bones, Yale's famous senior society. When the former became President he offered Mr. Clark an Ambassadorship or a place in the Cabinet. Mr. Clark declined to avail himself of the offer, as he did not wish to hold office. Mr. Clark was also well acquainted with Presidents McKinley, Roosevelt and Coolidge.

President Coolidge interested himself in an arrangement whereby Mr. Clark went to the 1924 Republican Convention at Cleveland in Dwight W. Morrow's private car. Mr. Clark was still suffering from his broken shoulder bone and this threatened to keep him from the convention until the solution of going in Mr. Morrow's car was suggested.

MANY PAY TRIBUTES.

HARTFORD, Conn., Sept. 5 (AP).—Leaders in public life and representative newspaper publishers and editors paid tribute to the character of Charles Hopkins Clark, editor of The Courant, who died tonight.

Among the expressions were the following:

Frank B. Noyes, publisher of The Washington Star, President of The Associated Press:

"In the death of Charles Hopkins Clark the country has lost a really great journalist, Hartford one of its first citizens and The Associated Press one of its wisest advisers. I have known him well for many years, respected and admired his great qualities of mind and heart, and held him in tender affection as a dear friend whose passing is a keen sorrow to me."

Melville E. Stone, counselor, The Associated Press:

"My acquaintance with Mr. Clark began more than thirty years ago. Charles Dudley Warner and General Hawley had been valued friends for a good while and it was quite natural that my relation with Charles Hopkins Clark should ripen into intimacy and affection very speedily. To a personal character, sturdy, indeed inflexible in its adherence to high moral principles, he had the added advantage of such training in his profession as led to the conviction that he was charged with great responsibility, and he spent his years in striving earnestly to observe the trusteeship imposed upon him. Journalism has lost one who adorned the office; the public mourns the passing of a good citizen with large opportunity which he used faithfully for the common weal, and we of his intimates suffer a pang which seems without consolation."

Adolph S. Ochs, publisher of THE NEW YORK TIMES:

"In the death of Charles Hopkins Clark the country loses one of its foremost citizens, a true patriot, a wise counselor, a courageous leader, a type of the best American manhood. He was a man of the broadest sympathies and intelligent appreciation of human problems and perplexities, of scholarly attainments, and had an intimate knowledge of the political and economic questions of the world. His genial nature and warm hearted friendship affectionately attached to him men of diverse opinions and predilections. He was a practitioner of the highest standards of journalism, an honor to the profession and a noble inspiration to his contemporaries. He was, for many years, a most useful member of the Board of Directors of The Associated Press and of its Executive Board. He goes to his rest crowned with a record of great and distinguished public service and with the respect and admiration of all who knew him. His life and work will be treasured memories. I have a sense of keen personal bereavement and I mourn with his family and associates, for I have lost a dear and good friend."

Kent Cooper, General Manager, The Associated Press:

"Charles Hopkins Clark was the personification of the word loyalty. Loyal in all things to which he adhered, he had almost a super-loyalty for his friends. There abided in him genuine affection for those who were fortunate enough to be associated with him. No man devoted himself more loyally to a duty than Mr. Clark devoted to the responsibilities of serving as a director of The Associated Press. For that reason he will be greatly missed by his fellow directors and by the management of this organization."

William Howard Taft, Chief Justice of the United States:

"His going creates a real void in the life of those who were privileged to know him and appreciate his friendship and in the community where he had been a tower of strength for forty years."

The Chief Justice points out in his tribute that his friendship with Mr. Clark began in his senior year at Yale, forty-three years ago, and had been "intimate, warm and constant ever since."

Nicholas Murray Butler, President of Columbia University:

"My recollection is that my acquaintance and friendship with Mr. Clark began at the National Republican Convention at St. Louis in 1896, when Major McKinley was nominated. From that time on a real friendship sprang up between us and I had for Mr. Clark unbounded affection and admiration. His great ability, his grasp on public questions, his courage, his instinct for the right side of a disputed issue and his exceptional power of convincing statement, all united to make him a great journalist and a great citizen. His was a rich and deep personality whose passing leaves a void which will not be filled."

George P. McLean, Senior United States Senator from Connecticut:

"Mr. Clark's death has brought me a very deep sense of personal loss which all will understand who knew the priceless value of a long and loyal friendship.

"Mr. Clark became precisely what he wanted to become, the master and the mister-mind of a great newspaper. Few men have lived more satisfactory lives or left brighter or better records."

Arthur Twining Hadley, President Emeritus, Yale University:

"Charles Hopkins Clark was one of the warmest-hearted men that ever lived. He knew how to make friends and to keep them. Sympathetic contact with others was the ruling passion of his life, and the greatest source of his power. The things that he said were not merely well said; they were driven home by the personality of the man behind them. He spoke from the heart, and he loved to hear others speaking in the same way, whether they agreed with him or not. Though he never shunted conflict, he never bore ill-will against a man whose honesty he trusted."

"The death of Charles Hopkins Clark will bring a sense of loss to a great number of people—old and young—all over the United States. He had passed his three score years and ten, but he had not grown old. There was never anything luke-warm about him. No one needed to guess at his likes or dislikes. They were always openly expressed. His honesty, his courage and his intelligence made him a great newspaper man. His vigorous personality and dominant will made him a sturdy enemy—and also a tenacious friend. He loved his friends and his friends loved him. They will be poorer without him and richer because a part of their lives."

"I have known Charles Hopkins Clark for many years. He had a national reputation as a journalist and as a wit. Mr. Clark was deeply read in literature, held his own convictions with tenacity and knew how to express them with vigor. The last article he published (outside of his daily work), was a brilliant and original article in the January number of The North American Review on Dr. Johnson, in which he took the opposite of the conventional opinion.

"As a journalist, and as a member of the Yale Corporation, he exerted a wide and deep influence, but by his personality alone he will for many years be remembered. He had a striking and original personality—a forceful natural-born leader."

George Appleton.

George Appleton, for many years manager for Nat Goodwin and Maxine Elliott, and manager of the Maxine Elliott Theatre since its establishment, died yesterday after several months' illness at the age of seventy-nine in his apartments in the Hotel Empire, Broadway and Sixty-third Street. He is survived by two married daughters, Mrs. Eleanor Appleton Redding and Mrs. Zaidee Appleton Kelliher. He was a member of the Friars Club. Funeral services will be held at 11 o'clock Wednesday morning at the Funeral Church, Broadway and Sixty-sixth Street.

Representative John Mitchell.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Sept. 5 (AP).—Representative John Mitchell of the Third Hampden District, dean of Springfield legislators, died this afternoon at Saranac Lake, according to a telegram received here tonight. Representative Mitchell recently had announced his retirement from political life.

EULOGIZE BEN WELCH AT FUNERAL RITES

TRIBUTE BY JUDGE LEVINE

Funeral services for Ben Welch, the blind comedian, who died last Thursday evening after an attack of bronchial pneumonia, were held yesterday noon in Riverside Memorial Chapel, Amsterdam Avenue and Seventy-sixth Street. The services were under the auspices of the Jewish Theatrical Guild, of which he was a member, and delegations representing the National Vaudeville Artists, the Grand Street Boys' Association and fraternal organizations attended.

More than 700 friends, many of them in the vaudeville profession, were in the chapel when the services began. The Rev. S. Greenfield of the Isaiah Temple, on West Seventy-sixth Street, conducted the services. He was assisted by Cantor Israel Breeah and a choir.

Loney Haskell of the Jewish Theatrical Guild, and Judge Max S. Levine, who represented the Grand Street Boys' Association, eulogized the comedian. The former alluded to the more than thirty years Welch had been on the stage, during which "Ben had never made an enemy." He said: "Ben Welch gave joy, cheer and brought sunshine into the lives of many thousands. He was an unusual type of man, gave unstintedly of himself for the benefit of others. He never refused to help in any worthy cause. He was a man of whom the theatrical profession had every reason to be proud."

Judge Levine paid tribute to Welch, who, he said, was one of the outstanding members of the Grand Street Boys' Association. He referred to the fact that when Welch lost his sight six years ago he never lost his courage or cheerfulness.

Floral pieces were sent by organizations with which Welch was connected and by many individuals. The pallbearers included Loney Haskell, Harry Chesterfield, Judge Levine, Harry Cooper, Dan Dody and Bert Levy.

Some of the more notable stage people at the services were William Brody, oldest pianist in vaudeville; Frank Murphy, himself partially blind and during the last seven years Welch's vaudeville partner; Albert Levy of the Sam Harris offices and Colonel Albert Morgan.

Interment was in Washington Cemetery, Brooklyn. Mr. Welch is survived by his mother, 90 years old; his wife, Jeannette, who was Miss Harris, and a seventeen-year-old daughter, Justine.

Welch was one of the premier Yiddish dialect comedians in burlesque and vaudeville. In the years before he went blind his earnings were as high as $50,000 a year.

After he became blind, Welch continued to play in vaudeville. His health began to fail about five months ago. The strain had been too much. He was on the verge of a physical and mental collapse and his doctors ordered a rest. On Aug. 7 he was taken to Bellevue Hospital, where it was said his condition was almost hopeless. Two days later he was removed to the Kings Park Hospital, Smithtown, L. I., where he died last Thursday.

James C. Marlowe, Comedian.

James C. Marlowe, who had played many comedy rôles in Cohan & Harris plays, died Saturday in the New York Hospital of asthma and chronic myocarditis. He was born fifty-nine years ago in Boston and will be buried Wednesday in Mount Hope Cemetery in that city. For several years he had resided at 249 West Forty-ninth Street. He started with the Pauline Hall Opera Company and during the earlier part of his career sang with the Empire City Quartet. For three seasons he played Major Yell in "A Texas Steer." Among the later productions he appeared in were "The Miracle Man," "Stop Thief" and "Mary." His wife died twenty years ago.

GEN. J. R. BROOKE DIES; SERVED IN TWO WARS

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 5 (AP).—Major Gen. John Rutter Brooke, U. S. A., retired, one of the few surviving general officers of the Civil War, died here tonight. General Brooke also served in the Spanish-American War and later was Governor General of Cuba and Porto Rico. He was retired in 1902.

General Brooke was born in Montgomery County, Pennsylvania, in 1838.

At the time of his retirement General Brooke was Commander of the Department of the East and second ranking officer of the American Army. He was born on the Brooke farm near Pottsville, Pa., where his family had lived for nearly 150 years. When the Civil War began he was working on the farm. He raised a company of volunteers and went to the front as a captain in the Fourth Pennsylvania Infantry. In November, 1861, he was made Colonel of the Fifty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers. He was brevetted Colonel for gallantry at Gettysburg and Brigadier General for gallantry at the battle of Spottsylvania Court House.

In the war with Spain he held command in Porto Rico and was made Military Governor of the island, afterward holding the latter post in Cuba, where Leonard Wood succeeded him. His administration in Cuba received high praise. Shortly before his retirement from the army there was talk of his nomination for Governor of Pennsylvania on the Republican ticket.

WALTER PULITZER DEAD.

Author and Magazine Publisher Was Son of Late Albert Pulitzer.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Sept. 5 (AP).—Walter Pulitzer of New York died at a private hospital here today. He was a son of the late Albert Pulitzer and a nephew of the late Joseph Pulitzer.

Walter Pulitzer, President of the Pulitzer Publishing Company, Inc., had for some years been engaged in the promotion and publication of magazines in this city and he was the author of several books. He was born in this city forty-eight years ago.

Several of his publications encountered litigation and had but a brief existence. Satire, The Welcome Guest, Pulitzer's Review, Pulitzer's Magazine and Pulitzer's Pertinent Paragraphs, were some of the titles. He was the author of "Chess Harmonies," "That Duel at the Chateau Marsanac," "A Cynic's Meditations," and "Cozy Corner Confidences." He composed several songs and a light opera.

various activities as a publisher had no connection with the enterprises established by the late Joseph Pulitzer.

Mr. Pulitzer was twice married. His first wife, formerly Miss Lillian Hearne of Patchogue, L. I., divorced him in 1918, seven years after their marriage. In 1919 he married Caroline P. Englehart, who survives, as do two children. Burial will be in this city.

FREDERICK E. WADHAMS.

American Bar Association's Treasurer Dies in Albany.

ALBANY N. Y., Sept. 5 (AP).—Frederick E. Wadhams, Treasurer of the American Bar Association since 1902, died at his home here tonight. For many years he was Secretary of the New York State Bar Association and the Board of Statutory Consolidation of New York.

Mr. Wadhams was widely known for his activity in connection with the organization of the American Bar. In recognition of his service in bringing into closer relations lawyers of the United States, Canada and England he was elected an honorary member of the Canadian Bar Association last week in New Brunswick.

He leaves a wife, Emma A. J. Wadhams, and a brother, Rear Admiral Albion V. Wadhams, U. S. N. He was born at Wadhams, then Wadhams Mills, Essex County, N. Y.

Mrs. Mary J. Adams.

GLEN COVE, L. I., Sept. 5.—Word was received here today of the sudden death at Belgrave Lake, Me., of Mrs. Mary J. Adams, wife of Horatio M. Adams, formerly with the Adams Chewing Gum Company. Mrs. Adams had been a member of the Summer colony here for many years. She is the third of three Glen Cove colony neighbors to die recently, the others being Mrs. Arthur W. Rossiter and Mrs. Andrew Fletcher.

Mrs. Adams was a daughter of the late Darwin R. James. Besides her husband she is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Robert Gary Jr., Mrs. Morris U. Ely, and a son, John. The Adams town house is at 53 Montgomery Street, Brooklyn.

William F. Harrigan.

William F. Harrigan, realty owner and retired coal merchant, died Saturday night at his home in Harmony Park, Yonkers, aged 52, after a lingering illness. He was widely known in Westchester County and several times had been offered the Democratic candidacy for Mayor of Yonkers. He had also declined Governor Smith's offer of the post of manager of the State Reformatory for Women at Bedford. He was a member of the Westchester Biltmore Country Club, Hudson River Country Club and the Knights of Columbus. He was a director of the Yonkers National Bank. His wife survives. Services will be held tomorrow morning in the Holy Rosary Catholic Church, Yonkers.

Dr. Edward S. Breidenbaugh.

GETTYSBURG, Pa., Sept. 5 (AP).—Dr. Edward S. Breidenbaugh, Professor Emeritus in Chemistry at Gettysburg College, died of heart disease today after a short illness. He was 77. Dr. Breidenbaugh wrote several text books on chemistry, which are extensively used in universities and colleges.

Dies Suddenly in Automobile.

Stricken with a heart attack while riding in an automobile last night, Patrick Connell, 63 years old, of 592 Tenth Avenue, collapsed at 181st Street and Broadway, and died before reaching Columbus Hospital. His brother-in-law, James Sherrin of 732 Amsterdam Avenue, was driving the car at the time.

Brakeman Killed in Yard Crash.

Edward Mack, 30 years old of 112-15 Kingsland Avenue, Queens, a brakeman employed by the Long Island Railroad, was fatally injured last night when buried beneath the wreckage of four freight cars colliding with another set of cars in the Long Island City freight yards at Jackson Avenue and Davis Street. Firemen of the Hunter's Point station extricated Mack from a twisted mass of steel and wood. At St. John's Hospital, where he was taken, he died shortly after midnight.

C. M. BULL DEAD IN HIS 72D YEAR

CRESCENT CLUB'S EX-HEAD

Athletic Organization's Development Largely Due to Him—To Be Buried in Brooklyn.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 5.—Charles Melville Bull, formerly President of the New York Coffee Exchange for three years, who for a much longer period served as President of the Crescent Athletic Club of Brooklyn, died at his Summer home in Middletown, near here, this morning in his seventy-second year.

Mr. Bull, who was a son of the late Henry and Henrietta Bull of this city, was born in Newport on Oct. 9, 1854, and was the last of his generation, his brothers, Melville Bull, former Congressman of Rhode Island; Dr. William Tillinghast Bull and Henry Bull Jr., being long since dead, and a sister, Mrs. Harriet Smyth, having died at Meadowbrook, Pa., less than a month ago.

Mr. and Mrs. Bull had been at their Middletown house since last September. Early last Winter Mr. Bull became ill and was operated on at the Newport Hospital. After being in the hospital for two months he returned to his home and improved for a while.

In 1879 Mr. Bull married Miss Louise Van Brunt, who survives him, as do a son, Charles M. Bull Jr., and a daughter, Mrs. Richard C. Adams.

Mr. Bull's body will be taken to Brooklyn for burial after funeral services at the home on Tuesday afternoon.

Mr. Bull came to New York in 1871 after graduating from Riverview Military Academy, Poughkeepsie, and began his business career in the office of a Wall Street broker. A few years later he became a partner in the firm of L. W. Minford & Co.

His association with the Crescent Athletic Club commenced in 1886, one year after its foundation as a football club with a membership of twenty. In 1889, when it was consolidated with the Nereid Boat Club, he was made a director of the combined organization and soon after President. Much of the development of the club took place under his leadership. During these early years the Summer home of the club was the old Van Brunt mansion at Bay Ridge, the former residence of Mrs. Bull's father.

GEORGE F. BABBITT DIES.

Former Health Commissioner of Boston and Editorial Writer.

NORTH SCITUATE, Mass., Sept. 5 (AP).—George Franklin Babbitt, for twenty years Health Commissioner of Boston and for twenty-five years editorial writer and paragrapher on The Boston Herald, died here today. He was born in Barre on Nov. 25, 1848, and was graduated from Harvard in 1872.

Before joining The Herald staff he was employed in the editorial departments of The Boston Post and New York Sun. He married at Brooklyn in 1905 Mrs. Eunice Humphrey Allen, a soprano singer, who died last October. Mr. Babbitt retired in 1909, but continued to write for Boston publications.

The Rev. Charles Cyrus Cook.

The Rev. Charles Cyrus Cook, for twelve years pastor of the South Brooklyn Gospel Church, died yesterday morning at his home, 19 Bruce Road, Upper Montclair, N. J., after an illness of several months. He was born sixty-five years ago in Baltimore. For twenty years he had been a publisher of scriptural literature with offices at 150 Nassau Street, this city. Latterly he had devoted himself to Bible teaching and evangelical work. He wrote several books and pamphlets on biblical subjects. Services will be held at 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon at the home in Upper Montclair.

MUSICIANS' STRIKE SETTLED OVER PHONE

New York and San Francisco, in All-Night Talk, Prevent the Orpheum Circuit Walkout.

MANY THEATRES AFFECTED

A series of long distance telephone conversations between two conferences, in progress simultaneously in New York and San Francisco, all Saturday night and early yesterday morning, resulted in a last minute avoidance of the general strike scheduled to go into effect yesterday in theatres of the Orpheum Circuit throughout the West.

Joseph N. Weber, President of the American Federation of Musicians, officials of the stagehands' union, Marcus Heiman, President of the Orpheum Circuit, and J. J. Murdock, general manager of the Keith-Albee Circuit, an Orpheum affiliation, were among those who attended the New York meeting which was held at the musicians' headquarters, 1,440 Broadway. At the same time West Coast Orpheum officials and San Francisco union heads were closeted together in a hotel room, 3,180 miles away. A telephone connection between the two places kept the negotiating groups in constant touch with each other.

Proposals and counter-proposals flew back and forth over the wire between the cities. Propositions made by the national leaders here were transmitted across the continent and considered by the San Francisco union men and Orpheum leaders. It was said to be almost 9 o'clock Sunday morning, New York time, before an agreement was reached and the strike ordered off.

Mr. Murdock, who is a leader in negotiations between the vaudeville managers and the union men, said last night that there was nothing unusual in this settlement by phone except that it happened at night. Some years ago, he added, a similar adjustment was made by telephone with the San Francisco union, but it took place in the daytime.

Settlement Effected by Compromise.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 5 (AP).—The strike of musicians, stage hands and motion picture operators in San Francisco, which resulted in sympathetic strikes being called in other cities, was settled today after an all-night conference between the theatre owners and representatives of the strikers.

Settlement of the controversy was based on a compromise in which the owners recognized the principle of a six-day week, a six-hour working day and met about half of the demands for increased pay. Minor issues are to be agreed upon later.

The strikers will return to work immediately. About 1,000 employes were affected in the San Francisco district.

Settlement of the strike averted sympathetic walkouts today by musicians in Orpheum and Pantages circuit theatres in Los Angeles, Chicago, Seattle, Minneapolis, Denver, Kansas City and other cities.

The strike began here last Wednesday when the musicians walked out and were followed by stage hands and motion picture operators, who quit in sympathy. About seventy-five theatres in the district were affected.

Issues still to be ironed out in the local musicians' controversy include the questions of whether the owners or the unions shall have charge of hiring substitute players and whether the six-day week shall be extended to orchestra leaders and feature players.

Chicago Men Return to Work.

CHICAGO, Sept. 5 (AP).—Cancellation of orders for a nation-wide sympathetic strike of union musicians, stage hands and moving picture machine operators employed in Orpheum vaudeville circuit theatres reached here today in time to avoid the interruption of shows in ten Orpheum circuit theatres. Another strike of musicians in 400 moving picture houses here was averted when an agreement was reached early today.

The Chicago Federation of Musicians was notified of the settlement in a telegram received from Joe Weber of New York, national head of the musicians. The strike was to have been effective after last night's performance.

The local difficulties were straightened out when managers and musicians agreed to an increase of $4.50 a week in wages with working hours to remain the same as in the old contract.

The strike in the Orpheum circuit theatres was actually in effect at midnight, when operators, musicians and stage hands in the ten theatres walked out in compliance with the order.

The Orpheum strike would also have taken effect in at least two more cities in the Northwest, as a similar group of employes walked out in the Orpheum theatres in both Des Moines, Iowa, and Minneapolis, Minn., at midnight.

WEST FACES NEW DOWNPOUR

Heavy Rain Damage Already Wrought in Many States.

CHICAGO, Sept. 5 (AP).—A waterlogged Middle West vainly scanned lowering skies tonight for a sign of relief from storms that have flooded fields, disorganized many cities and jeopardized travel. From Ohio to the Dakotas, the general forecast for Monday was of cloudy weather with probable rains.

The torrential downpours and accompanying violent wind squalls at the western edge of the area appeared to have reached their crest Friday night.

Estimated losses to agriculture reached 20 per cent. in some localities in Iowa and Illinois, which shared the worst of the rains.

Fields of small grain awaiting threshing were inundated, but it was reported corn would suffer most. Grain authorities said the crop through the central portion of the corn belt already was two weeks behind and required ideal weather to beat the frost.

This morning found hundreds of automobile tourists virtually marooned outside Fulton, Mo., on United States Highway No. 40, principal thoroughfare between St. Louis and Kansas City. Some sought refuge in near-by farmhouses while others looked to their cars for a night's shelter.

THE SCREEN

By MORDAUNT HALL.

"Red" Grange's First Film.

In his first screen touchdown "Red" Grange demonstrated his ability to tackle the rôle of a college hero and portray it far more convincingly than most of those handsome young men who are thoroughly accustomed to greasepaint and facing the camera. Mr. Grange's performance in "One Minute to Play" is pleasingly natural, and it is agreeable to observe that he has not copied the conventional tactics of the ordinary movie actor. He has an ingratiating appearance and the idea that he is actually a football player adds to the thrill of this gridiron story.

Both Sam Wood, producer of this photoplay, and Byron Morgan, author of the yarn, are entitled to their share of the credit. Mr. Wood has used his camera effectively during the tense periods and his direction of the players is sound and sensible. Even in the love scenes there is nothing silly and no violent kissing. It was also a happy idea to have a clever dog furnish a good deal of the comedy.

Immediately after the presentation of "One Minutee to Play" at the Colony yesterday afternoon, Mr. Grange was introduced in person. He made a brief talk in which he told how uncomfortable he felt the first time he used paint on his lips. He added that he hoped the audience would enjoy the production as much as he did acting in it.

"One Minute to Play" has its full quota of suspense and fun, with a dash of romance. The fact that Mr. Wood has kept within reasonable bounds makes it one of the outstanding pictures dealing with student life. The spirited rivalry between the colleges of Parmalee and Caxton is depicted good-naturedly without recourse to a menace in the shape of a jealous young man. The ogre of this story is "Red" Wade's father, who eventually, at the crucial moment, has a change of heart. Yesterday afternoon when John Wade "Red" elected to go to Caxton because he did not think much of Parmalee's football team. However, he decided to stay at Parmalee, and although he has promised his father not to play football, he eventually gets into the game. His father discovers this through a student, who sends him an article in a local newspaper describing "Red's" prowess. Hence on the days of days, when the game between Caxton and Parmalee was to come off, "Red" is forbidden to go to the game or Parmalee will lose John Wade's financial support. To keep the real reason for his not playing a secret, "Red," after touching his lips with whisky and pouring some on his clothes, pretends to be drunk.

Hence the better part of the tussle between Caxton and Parmalee goes on without "Red," who sits at a window hardly able to watch the game. Suddenly the moment comes for him to get on to the field, and although the result may be conjectured, it is none the less stirring.

The comedy herein has been skillfully handled, and the grand-stand scenes and those of the football field, with the panting players, are set forth so well that they seem like the real thing.

Lee Shumway gives a fine characterization of the football coach. He looks as if his heart and soul were set on his team winnig, and when he brushes away "Red," whom he believes was intoxicated the night before, he manifests his vexation in an easy, human way. Sally Rogers, the girl in the case, is played sympathetically by Mary McAllister.

When "Cat" Means Lion.

Douglas MacLean's new picture, "Hold That Lion," has a flying start as a comedy, for the title alone conveys some idea of the humorous possibilities of this effort. But although the king of beasts in an East African background serves up his portion of merriment by the mental pain and anguish he causes the characters, there are other witty incidents that are not dependent upon wild animals.

Almost every screen comedian at one time or another decides that the audience will laugh if he loses his trousers at an inopportune moment. Chaplin depended upon this idea for a sequence in "The Gold Rush" and Harold Lloyd made the most of it in "The Freshman." Mr. MacLean gives this comic notion a new twist. His trousers are taken from him to be mended, and as they are not returned when he expects them, he unwisely leaves his room and finds that he can't get back. An inebriated person comes along and Jimmy Hastings (Mr. MacLean), hoping to gain possession of the other man's trousers, insists that it is quite the thing to go about in a dinner jacket and underwear. Just when the intoxicated one is about to get into what he thinks is the swing of things the hotel detective appears upon the scene. Jimmy eludes the sleuth, but the other poor chap is apprehended. Thereafter Jimmy finds himself in various awkward predicaments, but he finally solves the difficulty by annexing a Highlander's kilt and a big sporran.

Young Jimmy is an assiduous admirer of Marjorie Brand, whom he follows around the world. He is elated when in East Africa he catches up with her and she promises him the first dance. Just about the time he ought to have been downstairs he was wandering about the hallways of the hotel without his trousers.

Jimmy becomes interested in a "cat" hunt, declaring himself to be a cat-hunter with few equals. He wonders why Marjorie's father offers a silver cup for catching a live cat, until his eyes are opened. To his dismay he learns that these big game hunters call a lion a "cat."

Apparently the only way Jimmy can catch cats is to offer himself as bait for them and then run away. In this case he gets home just before the lion. He is credited with capturing a "cat" and saving Marjorie's life, but never goes "cat" hunting again.

This is a clever comedy with bright subtitles and novel situations. It is the best production in which Mr. MacLean has appeared for some time.

Other Photoplays.

At the Mark Strand Harry Langdon is appearing in "The Strong Man."

"Risky Business," with Vera Reynolds, is the chief pictorial attraction at the Hippodrome.

DONATELLA PRENTISI SINGS.

Mme. Sembrich's Pupil Is Applauded at a Musicale.

Special to The New York Times.

LAKE GEORGE, N. Y., Sept. 5.—Mme. Marcella Sembrich gave a musicale this afternoon at her villa, Bay Side, Lake George, to introduce her pupil, Miss Donatella Prentisi, a dramatic soprano, who will make her début at Carnegie Hall on Dec. 1. A large audience was enthusiastic in approval of her rendition of a program of classic songs.

Free Performance of 'Il Trovatore.'

A free open-air performance of "Il Trovatore" will be given tonight at Starlight Park Stadium. The cast will include Charles Hart, tenor; Olga Muskat, soprano; Martha Melis, mezzo-soprano; Clementina Vasti, soprano; Giorgio Pulitti, baritone; F. Palazzi, basso, and Vincent Nola, tenor. The orchestra will be under the direction of Vito Moscato, and Paul Cremonesi will act as stage manager.

Speakers for a Clean Theatre.

Henrietta Crosman and Henry E. Dixey will be the principal speakers at a dinner to be given by the American Theatre Association at the Town Hall Club next Sunday night. This will be the sixth dinner and "theatre conference" of the association, which was formed in the interest of a clean theatre.

LEON ERROL ACTS IN FILM IN BERLIN

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Sept. 5.—There is considerable speculation in theatrical and cinema circles here over the mysterious movements of Leon Errol, American comedian. Arriving here several days ago with Mrs. Errol, the actor immediately plunged into a series of conferences with Max Reinhardt and other leading Berlin managers of both stage and movies. It was rumored and denied that he would appear for a brief engagement in one of the big Berlin revues.

Errol also visited several film studios here and appeared in scenes on the huge UFA lot at Templehof. Beyond saying that the cameramen and scenery had been placed at the comedian's disposal, the UFA management declined to disclose the character of the picture he was making. Errol himself was equally uncommunicative and left tonight for Vienna without remark save that he had greatly enjoyed his stay here and hoped to return later.

Before Mr. Errol's recent departure for Europe the Florenz Ziegfeld office announced that the comedian would remain under its management, and probably continue his appearances in "Louie the 14th," either here or in London in the Fall. Mr. Errol said that the chief purpose of his trip abroad was to receive medical treatment in Vienna for his ankle, which was injured during a fall on the stage in Chicago in April.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

Three new productions will open tonight: "Sour Grapes" at the Longacre Theatre, "Castles in the Air" at the Selwyn, and "What's the Use?" at the Princess.

Many of the attractions in town will have Labor Day matinees this afternoon, at which time "The Shanghai Gesture" will reopen at Chanin's Forty-sixth Street with Florence Reed again in the leading role.

"My Country" will be transferred from Chanin's to the Forrest Theatre this afternoon and "Honest Liars" will move from the Sam H. Harris to the George M. Cohan.

Hilda Vaughn, Rosemary Hilton, Sidney Booth, Harold Elliott and Don Cook have been engaged for "Seed of the Brute," which is planned for October presentation in New York.

Frederick Truesdale has been added to the cast supporting Frances Starr in "The Shelf," which opens in Philadelphia a week hence before coming to New York.

Stark Young will deliver a series of lectures on "The Theatrical Season of 1926-27" at the New School for Social Research, 465 West Twenty-third Street. The first will be given on Oct. 12.

A Chicago company of "The Vagabond King," headed by Dennis King and Arthur Deagon, begins its engagement there tonight.

A. P. Waxman, best known in the theatre as a press agent, has accepted for production "Wings," a play by Ashley Miller and Zelda Sears, with incidental music by Arthur Bergh.

A preview showing of "Queen High" will be given at the Ambassador Theatre on Tuesday evening before six hundred United States sailors, who will be guests of the management.

The new year at the Theatre Guild School of Acting begins tomorrow with twenty seniors and fifty-six junior members enrolled. Hamilton MacFadden will be executive manager of the school.

"First Love," in which Fay Bainter and Bruce McRae are appearing, opens tonight in Atlantic City under the management of the Shuberts.

A meeting of the subscribers of the Threshold Matinee Theatre will be held at the Princess Theatre on Thursday, Sept. 16, at 10:30 A. M. to formulate plans for the coming season.

SEES PHILIPPINES RICH IN 30 YEARS

FOREIGN CAPITAL NEEDED

VISIT TO LEYTE ISLAND

By RUSSELL B. PORTER

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

TACLOBAN, P. I., Sept. 5.—Addressing a crowd of Filipinos from the steps of the big new concrete provincial building in Tacloban, capital of Leyte Province and Island, Colonel Carmi A. Thompson said:

"It is the duty of every country to develop its natural resources for itself and the world. Until the second half of the last century the United States was without enough railroads. It accepted foreign capital, which developed our great West. We paid our debt eventually and became wealthy. Now we are a lending instead of a borrowing nation. With your natural resources twenty-five or thirty years of trading and financing should make these islands lending instead of borrowing islands."

This was the first time Colonel Thompson had been so specific as to the time it might take for the economic development of the Philippines if large-scale capital were encouraged. His remarks are regarded as specially significant in view of the growing reconciliation among Filipino leaders to postponement of the settlement of the complete independence question for a term of years, for which Congress might fix a definite political status, ending the present uncertainty, and which, it is hoped, would attract capital meanwhile. Filipino leaders would welcome such a solution. The speech may have been intended as a trial balloon to get the reaction through the Filipino press.

Aside from the number of years involved, many educated Filipinos during Colonel Thompson's trip have said privately that the Filipinos would accept such a solution, cease agitation for immediate independence and cooperate with American capital in the development of rubber, coal, iron and other raw materials the United States needs, provided the door were left ajar for reopening the independence discussion and the public domain were protected from ruthless exploitation by big capitalists.

Agitation Out of Hand.

Wherever the party goes we find influential politicos, while making speeches for immediate, complete and absolute independence, admitting privately that they have to do so for political reasons, giving the impression that the politicos have let the independence agitation get out of hand and are now confronted with the task of educating the public to a realization that these aspirations must be deferred. Even Manuel Quezon, the chief and most radical advocate of immediate independence, does not expect independence for at least ten years. Others say their people will be unable to handle complete independence for a generation.

Many politicos say they and the people really do not desire absolute independence in the sense of complete severance from the United States. When they ask for independence, according to this view, which seems widespread, they actually mean complete local self-government under American supervision, perhaps like the Canadian Government in the British Commonwealth, when Congress decides they are ready for it. They say they realize their lack of money, guns, battleships and soldiers makes it essential that they have American army and navy protection, and they want the American flag to remain over the rock of Corregidor at the mouth of Manila Bay and over the Cavite Navy Yard. They would also welcome a strong American check on their Government to prevent fraudulent elections, protect the public health and prevent waste of public funds and possible national bankruptcy, with the provision that the United States shall resume complete control if the Filipino officials go wrong.

Back in the Independence Belt.

Having left the southern islands of Mindanao and Sulu, where there is more desire for the passage of the Bacon bill to let the Americans, instead of the Filipinos, rule them, Colonel Thompson is now in the Visayan Islands in the central part of the archipelago a second time, getting back into the independence agitation belt. He is trying in his speeches and in private conversation to concentrate the Filipinos' attention on economic rather than political discussions, but was impressed today with the speech of the leading Filipino lawyer of Leyte Province, who frankly admitted that the Congress of the United States has a legal right to do what it pleases with the Philippines, whether to make them a State or Territory, dispose of them to some other nation or grant them independence.

Educated Filipinos realize that, Spain having ceded the Philippines to the United States in the treaty of Paris, the United States has a legal title to the vast public domain undeveloped by the Filipinos. This factor, plus the lack of any specific grievance against the American Government, may explain the moderate tone of the Filipinos' appeal for independence. Despite some speeches and banners "demanding" independence, which may be due to the natives' poor English, the general spirit has been to appeal to the American sense of fair play. The present situation does not hold any threat of armed rebellion, although there is some danger that the politicos' radical speeches may inflame the crack-brained to an act of violence and possibly a boycott against American merchant and goods, and spread the idea of a non-cooperation policy if Congress should fail to act justly in settling the existing problems.

Replica of Liberty Bell.

When the Mindora docked we found a crowd gathered around a replica of the Liberty Bell, with this legend: "This bell has been silent for centuries. When will it ring for the Philippines?" Another banner read: "We hope Colonel Thompson will be the last investigator."

The speakers included a young woman who said the Filipino women were united with the men in their independence aspirations. She said woman's position in the Philippines was better than in any neighboring country, which appears to be true so far as China and Japan are concerned at least, and it is certainly better than the condition of the Moro women. She spoke in English, but the Governor and other men officials spoke in Spanish. Everywhere the party has gone, most of the speeches have been in Spanish or native dialect, only the younger generation making English speeches, indicating a lack of homogeneity among the Filipinos, who need further education in one language before they can be regarded as a nation.

DE SOLA POOL FINDS PALESTINE IS SECURE

Rabbi David de Sola Pool of the Spanish and Portuguese Synagogue, who returned last week from Palestine, said yesterday that one of the things which impressed him most was the complete public security in Palestine and Transjordania.

"I was able to go with my wife and children," said the rabbi, "by automobile from Jerusalem over the Jordan Bridge to Amman, the ancient Rabbath Ammon, in Transjordania, as freely and as safely as one can go from New York to Montreal.

"This perfect public security is the best evidence of the good relations which exist among all elements of the population. Christian, Moslem and Jew in Palestine have settled down to the work which creates real material values in the land and the no less real spiritual values of cooperation and friendship.

"The standard of living has risen, a fact best exemplified by the new and copious water supply for Jerusalem which was inaugurated the day that I arrived there.

"Jewish progress is most marked in the extraordinary agricultural development of the Valley of Esdraelon and in the building of pleasant modern residential districts in Jerusalem, Haifa, Tiberius and, of course, Tel-Aviv.

"It was my privilege while in Jerusalem to purchase for Nathan Straus a site for the Health and Welfare Centre which he is about to erect there for the benefit of all elements of the population. High Government authorities, the Mayor of Jerusalem and other leaders in Palestine have all expressed themselves enthusiastically about this new undertaking."

RAVENHALL'S BATHS SOLD FOR $1,300,000

Noted Bathing and Dining Place at Coney to Be Replaced by $2,000,000 Hotel.

Ravenhall's Baths at Coney Island has been sold by Joseph Sartori and Joseph Balzarini, proprietors of "Joe's" restaurants, to William Avitable and others for $1,300,000, it was learned yesterday. The deal was completed Friday when Mr. Avitable placed a certified check for $600,000 in the hands of Mr. Sartori.

On the site that Ravenhall's has occupied for years, the acreage stretching from Surf Avenue to the ocean between West Nineteenth and West Twentieth Streets, the new owners plan to erect a $2,000,000 apartment hotel and several apartment houses. The hotel will be twelve stories high and the apartment houses six. Other improvements are planned.

For many seasons Ravenhall's has been famous as a place where visitors to Coney would go to bathe and dine. Reports have it that Sartori and Balzarini paid approximately $500,000 when they bought the property from the Ravenhall estate.

BOOK IN SUIT FOILS STABBER

Detective and Companion Attacked in Restaurant—Arrest Four.

A thick memorandum book which Detective William Wittenberg of the Eleventh Division carried in an inside coat pocket probably saved his life yesterday morning when a man said to be Louis Frapietro of 211 Tillary Street, Brooklyn, tried to stab the detective with a butcher knife in a restaurant at 50 Park Avenue, Brooklyn, while another man held Wittenberg's arms. The detectives were attacked as they entered the restaurant on a tour of inspection.

Wittenberg and Detective Joseph Perkins, who was with him, drew their pistols and arrested four men after firing two shots. The three other men besides Frapietro said they were Tony Conti of Edwards Street, Louis Geneta of 49 Adelphi Street and Daniel Broccio of 201 Tillary Street, Brooklyn. Magistrate Folwell in Gates Avenue Court held them all for hearing Sept. 10 on a charge of felonious assault.

Seek Men Who Rob 65 of $10,000.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y., Sept. 5 (AP).—The police were still without a clue today which would aid them in the search for the six masked men who last night held up Egan's poolroom on a busy street here and robbed sixty-five men of about $10,000. The patrons were lined up against a wall by four men and the other two passed along, searching pockets.

'Hands Down,' Robbers Order, Lest Victims Draw a Crowd

When two armed men walked into the haberdashery shop of Morris Eisner at 147 East Houston Street last night, the proprietor and another man, Louis Goodbaum of 118 Union Avenue, Brooklyn, raised their hands high above their heads in the traditional token of submission to thieves. But the robbers were not standing on the conventions.

"Don't put 'em up; put 'em down. Do you want to flag a crowd in the street?" said one bandit as he covered the two with a pistol. As Eisner and Goodbaum dropped their hands to the counter, the other thief ransacked the cash drawer of $65—all that was in it.

The robbers then backed to the door and disappeared in the crowds at Eldridge and Houston Streets.

TWO BOYS KILLED IN AUTO ACCIDENTS

GIRL IS VICTIM OF TAXICAB

Columbia Waitress, Confused in Traffic, Is Knocked Down—Brick in Street Causes a Death.

Charles Mucheli, 5 years old, died in Bellevue Hospital yesterday ten minutes after he had been struck by an automobile in front of his home at 338 East Fortieth Street. Samuel Spirudler of 1,740 Seventy-sixth Street, Brooklyn, was arrested on a technical charge of homicide made by Patrolman William Waters of the East Thirty-fifth Street Station.

A three-year-old lad, Eugene Spina of 995 North Main Street, Waterbury, Conn., was killed when a machine driven by his father Carmine Spina, overturned in Central Boulevard, Palisade Park, N. J. Mr. and Mrs. Spina, their son and a cousin, Miss Jennie Firo, were on their way to a wedding in Paterson, N. J.

The father saw Eugene leaning out of the open door of the car. He reached back to pull the boy in. The automobile was coasting down a hill and as Spina made his move the machine sped from the highway to the curb and turned over. Eugene's head was caught between the side of the car and the door.

Columbia Waitress Killed.

Miss Theresa Murphy, a waitress in Whittier Hall, Columbia University, became confused as she crossed Amsterdam Avenue at 125th Street. She was knocked down and dragged by a taxicab driven by Clarence Smith of 2,400 Seventh Avenue. She was pronounced dead at St. Luke's Hospital. Smith was arrested and was later held in $5,000 bail by Magistrate Oberwager in Homicide Court.

Gustave Pearlman of 922 Hoe Avenue, the Bronx, died in Lincoln Hospital, where he was taken late Saturday night after he and Mrs. Mary Schwartzcops, 55 years old, of 226 East 185th Street, the Bronx, had been struck on their way to a subway station. The car struck them at Whitlock and Hoe Avenues and the two occupants of the machine fled. Mrs. Schwartzcops died almost instantly.

Three Slightly Injured.

A big Pierce-Arrow sped across Ashford Street at Glenmore Avenue in Brooklyn last night and struck a small touring car belonging to Frank Romano, 60 years old, of 1,542 Pacific Street. The touring car spun into a telegraph pole, and its owner, who was riding in the front seat, was severely cut about the head. The Pierce-Arrow swayed a bit and went on.

Romano's wife, Teresa, who was in the rear seat with Mary Bascone, 25 years old, also of 1,542 Pacific Street, was badly cut in the crash. Miss Bascone escaped with slight injuries, as did James and Salvatore, Romano's two sons.

Salvatore, who was driving the car, searched the street after the accident and discovered a hub cap belonging to a Pierce-Arrow. He also found broken glass.

An unusual automobile accident brought George Wright of 236 Summit Avenue, Union City, N. J., into Jefferson Market Court, where he was held without bail on a technical charge of homicide. Wright had Edward McDonough of 151 West Twentieth Street riding on the seat of the truck he was driving on Saturday night. In West Eleventh Street, between Hudson and Greenwich Streets, the truck hit a brick which had tumbled from a pile of building material. McDonough was thrown from his seat and a wheel passed over him. He died in St. Vincent's Hospital.

Three Hurt in Taxi Crash.

Three persons were injured when a taxicab skidded into an elevated pillar at Second Avenue and Eighty-second Street. They were Anton Renovitch, 58 years old, his wife, Anna, 60 years old, and their son, Anton Jr., 15 years old. They were treated at Reception Hospital.

Mrs. James Dewey of Belfast, N. Y., received a fractured skull when the car in which she was riding collided with another on the White Horse Pike, near Magnolia, N. J. With Mrs. Dewey were her husband and Mr. and Mrs. Victor Chamberlain, neighbors in Belfast. Their car was in collision with one driven by William S. McCourt, a Philadelphia police captain. Mrs. Dewey's condition was serious, it was said at the West Jersey Homeopathic Hospital, near Magnolia. Police said the collision occurred when the two machines sidewiped each other in attempts to avoid other automobiles.

Mount Vernon Motorcycle Policeman Fred Herbison was struck by a machine in Prospect Avenue, Mount Vernon. Herbison's right leg was broken. The other driver was Anthony Devito of 15 Crescent Place, Sherwood Park.

FIVE SURVIVE AUTO PLUNGE.

One Hurt in Roll Down 200-Foot Incline in New Hampshire.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITEFIELD, N. H., Sept. 5.—One man was seriously injured, but all five members of a party of automobilists miraculously escaped death when their sedan was crowded off the road today in the famous Crawford Notch, quivered on the brink of a precipice for a second and rolled over and down a 200-foot incline until it stopped bottom side up.

August Decks of Medford, Mass., driver of the car, is in the local hospital with a compound fracture of one leg and suffering internal injuries. Mrs. Decks and Mrs. Amelia Strybel and her daughter, Madeline, also of Medford, and Arthur Blockell of Stoneham, Mass., escaped with cuts and bruises.

The accident occurred about three-quarters of a mile from the Crawford House and was caused when another car forced the Decks' sedan off the highway.

John Dillanger of Baltimore Dies After Connecticut Auto Wreck.

ROCKVILLE, Conn., Sept. 5. (AP).—John Dillanger, 23, of Baltimore, was fatally injured and three others were hurt when their automobile turned over near here today. Dilanger died in the Rockville Hospital.

Earl Missel of Hartford was injured internally and Philip Tiernan and Anthony Durford, also of Hartford, suffered cuts and bruises.

Tiernan, the driver, said the car left the highway when he was forced to turn out suddenly to avoid hitting another automobile.

Americans Abroad Aid Golden Rule Sunday; Attend Relief Meeting and Eat Orphans' Fare

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

GENEVA, Sept. 5.—Golden Rule Sunday, designated by the Near East Relief for international observance on Dec. 5 in aid of war orphans in the Near East, received a big impetus in Geneva last night when 500 men and women from a score of countries pledged their support at a unique dinner of orphans' fare.

Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, Jane Addams and other prominent Americans here for the League sessions attended. They ate a frugal orphans' meal of boiled rice and stewed prunes from tin dishes and learned about the Near East Relief work.

Dr. Inazo Nitobe of Japan, Associate General Secretary of the League, presided and speakers included Raymond Fosdick of the Rockefeller Foundation, Archbishop Soderblom of Upsala, Sweden; Commodore Constantin Melas of Greece and Charles Vickrey of New York.

Greetings were read from Dr. John H. Finley, Dr. Nansen and ex-Premier Venizelos and tributes were paid to the late Cleveland H. Dodge as founder and treasurer of the Near East Relief. A letter was read from President Coolidge endorsing the movement.

A picturesque touch was given the dinner by the presence of three Eastern Church Archbishops from Bulgaria, Transylvania and Poland in their black robes and stovepipe hats.

Mr. Vickrey announced that Golden Rule contributions last year totaled $1,000,000 and that 63,572 orphans and destitute children in Near Eastern countries were among the beneficiaries. He pleaded for a wider observance of the Golden Rule spirit and said his recent tour in Near Eastern lands convinced him that constructive American relief work had done wonders in helping the general economic improvement there.

ARGONAUTS BREAK OVER PARIS FLIGHT

Col. Hartney Refuses to Be Tied by Backer's Wire From Abroad Not to Start Suit.

TO USE HIS OWN JUDGMENT

Sikorsky Stands With Argonaut President—Plane to Fly Today if Weather Permits.

The differences over ownership of the Sikorsky plane, which is to fly from New York to Paris some time this month, and the pilot who is to fly it, have caused a break between the three directors of the Argonauts, the organization which was formed to finance and administer the flight. Colonel H. E. Hartney, Vice President of the Argonauts, said yesterday he intended to act as he thought best, no matter what Robert Jackson, President of the Argonauts, who is in Paris, or any one else thought should be done.

His comment was precipitated by a cablegram from Mr. Jackson to Colonel Hartney and Igor Sikorsky, designer of the plane, directing them not to take any legal action that was unapproved by him. Mr. Sikorsky wrote to Mr. Jackson agreeing on this stand. Mr. Jackson, Mr. Sikorsky and Colonel Hartney are the three directors of the Argonauts.

"I am the directing head of the Argonauts here," said Colonel Hartney when he was asked about the cablegram, "and I will do what seems best. I have authority as Vice President of th Argonauts, and more than that the original contract was between my organization, the General Airways, and the Sikorsky company. That contract gives me full power to act. However, I shall not do anything until I learn where every one stands in this matter, and you can interpret that as you think best."

Colonel Hartney took exception again to the statement made by Mr. Sikorsky that only $20,000 had been paid by the Argonauts to the Sikorsky company. He said that $35,000 had been paid over, and that the purchase price of the plane was $43,000, leaving only $8,000 to be paid on the contract instead of $80,000, as Mr. Sikorsky indicated. One of the interesting things in the controversy is that although Colonel Hartney and Mr. Sikorsky occupy adjoining offices, they have not conferred together over the controversy, and have communicated with each other only through the newspapers.

Colonel Hartney admitted that the contract under which he claims control of the plane is not altogether clear as to when the Argonauts may take possession of it, for although it provides that the plane shall be delivered May 1, it also provides that it shall be tested under the direction of Mr. Sikorsky for at least three weeks. There is no time limit on these tests, and Colonel Hartney said yesterday they might be continued indefinitely, if the motors are overhauled and kept in good condition. This gives the manufacturer the control until, in his opinion, the plane is properly tested and ready for the flight.

The plane probably will be flown again today, if the weather is favorable, and the field not too soft from the rain.

Broker's Alarm Brings Detectives In Burglar Hunt.

On complaint of Charles Jennings, a broker, William Adams, a negro elevator operator, 23 years old, of 64 La Salle Street, was held without bail in West Side Court yesterday by Magistrate Charles A. Oberwager for examination tomorrow on a charge of attempted burglary.

Jennings, who lives on the sixth floor of 422 West 120th Street, was awakened early yesterday morning by the negro, he said, who was on the roof of an apartment house adjoining, trying to remove a screen on one of his windows. Leaping out of bed, Jennings threw a golf stick through the screen. This aroused neighbors and the police of the West 100th Street Station were notified. Detectives arrested Adams on the roof. Because the detectives said he had a police record showing two previous convictions, Magistrate Oberwager held Adams without bail.

POLAND DAY AT EXPOSITION.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 5 (AP).—With Dr. Jan Ciechonowski, Polish Minister to the United States, as the guest of honor, Polish Day was celebrated today at the Sesquicentennial Exposition. More than 45,000 citizens of Polish birth, mostly from Eastern cities, attended the exercises in the Auditorium.

A parade of former Polish soldiers and members of Polish societies was a feature. Mayor Kendrick and Dr. Ciechonowski viewed the parade from a box in the Sesquicentennial Stadium. Others in the Polish Minister's party were Mrs. Ciechonowski and S. J. Stalinski, Secretary of the Polish Legation.

Despite the rain, which fell most of the day, the celebration helped to swell the attendance at the exposition to one of the largest crowds on record. Officials estimated that more than 125,020 persons passed through the turnstiles.

LAST CRYING BANDIT TAKEN THROUGH GIRL

TRIES TO LEAP TO DEATH

Prisoner, Bathed in Tears, Admits Part in Hold-Ups That Sent Companions to Prison.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 5.—The last of the "cry-baby bandits" of New York, James O'Connor, alias James Costello, was captured in a rooming house on Erie Avenue, near Nineteenth Street, today, after New York detectives trailed his sweetheart to this city and interrupted their tryst.

O'Connor broke down and wept after he had made a futile effort to escape. As he was being taken to City Hall his sobs continued. Later, as he continued to weep, he attempted to jump to his death from the fifth floor of City Hall.

For two months detectives have sought Costello, a member of a gang of bandits blamed for more than a score of hold-ups in and near New York. Five of his comrades were captured and now are serving long terms. All broke down and wept when arrested. A seventh member of the bang was shot to death during the hold-up of a New York bank some time ago.

As O'Connor fled through Northern Pennsylvania, cleverly covering up his trail, police tracked his sweetheart, a pretty, bobbed-hair blonde. They seized the letters she addressed to him and opened the letters he sent her. They knew that soon they would meet.

A week ago O'Connor came to Philadelphia. Detectives knew he was here, but just where they did not know. So they continued to trail the girl. Last Saturday night she started from New York to keep a tryst with Costello.

Detectives Clancy and McNamara were on the same train. The girl clambered into a taxicab at the West Philadelphia station. The detectives followed her. They had been joined by Detective Arford of the local force.

The girl entered the rooming house. Ten minutes later the detectives followed her. They crept up to O'Connor's room, Arford was posted at the door. The other detectives went to a rear porch.

As Arford entered the room Costello ran for the rear porch into the arms of the New Yorkers. Then he broke down and wept.

"Life is cruel," he cried. "For two months I have waited for her, and then we meet, and now this."

After the couple had been taken to the City Hall, the girl was released. She was told to go back to New York.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 5 (AP).—James O'Connor, "cry-baby" bandit, told the police when he was arrested tonight that he was through with a life of crime and had come to Philadelphia to seek "honest" employment. He admitted his part in more than a score of hold-ups in New York. O'Connor's sweetheart asserted she was unaware of the life O'Connor led and had come here to marry him. Her identity was not revealed.

FIRE SCARES 40 FAMILIES.

Woman Collapses and Is Carried Out of Tenement by Neighbors.

Forty families in two tenements at 60 and 62 East 102d Street were endangered last night by a fire which started in an areaway between the two buildings and spread rapidly, causing a second alarm to be sent in. The blaze was extinguished by firemen after half an hour's fight.

The fire was first noticed by a passerby. By the time the firemen arrived the flames were gaining headway in the apartment of Isaac Rubens on the first floor of 60 East 102d Street. This fact and the congested nature of the district in lower Harlem caused the sounding of the second alarm. Slight damage was done to the Rubens apartment. The fire was checked at this point.

Overcome by excitement, Mrs. Marie Lopota, 66 years old, collapsed in her apartment on the second floor and was carried from the building by neighbors.

TIPS OF TOURISTS SHRINK.

Vacationists Coming Home Cut Down on Gifts to Cameronia Stewards.

The Anchor liner Cameronia arrived yesterday from Glasgow with 194 first-class passengers, who were mostly American tourists returning from vacation trips to Europe.

"Americans are all right eastbound," said the stewards on the liner. "They give $5 to their table steward and $5 to the bedroom steward. Westbound they are mostly broke and the tip ranges from $1 up."

The Cameronia also brought 280 second and 585 third class passengers.

Catholic Verein Meets in Buffalo.

BUFFALO, Sept. 5 (AP).—Delegates to the twenty-ninth annual convention of the New York State branch of the Catholic Central Verein were welcomed to Buffalo by Mayor Frank X. Schwab at their opening session here today. Alios J. Weidern of Buffalo, President of the organization, urged the Verein to pass resolutions outlining its stand on the Mexican situation and on the State referendum on prohibition enforcement.

'DR.' WYMAN EXPOSED AS FORMER CONVICT

Served Term for Wearing Naval Uniform as Escort to Princess Fatima at White House.

"Dr." Sterling C. Wyman, who took an active part in the Valentino funeral arrangements last week, was identified yesterday as Stephen Weinberg, who is known to the Federal authorities under eleven different aliases, and to the police and public as New York's most spectacular impersonator. As a navy officer, a doctor or a lawyer he has "impressed" many of the unsuspecting. His weakness is for hobnobbing with the great.

Wyman, or Weinberg, had a ready explanation for every one of his escapades when he was found at his home, 556 Crown Street, Brooklyn. He said that he had legally changed his name from Weinberg to Wyman. He described his various arrests and convictions, some of which grew out of his impersonations. He said he was trying hard to live down his past and that his past would have been forgotten had not the newspapers dug it up because he had come forward to assist his "close friend," S. George Ullman, manager for the late Rudolph Valentino.

Wyman's thirst for glory led him to attach himself to the suite of the Princess Fatima of Afghanistan, when she visited the United States in 1921. He ingratiated himself with the Princess when he told her he would arrange an interview with President Harding. He arranged the interview, but it was as a result of that interview at the White House that Wyman got eighteen months for reflection in the Federal Penitentiary in Atlanta, where he was sentenced by Federal Judge Chatfield in Brooklyn, following his conviction on a charge of impersonating an officer of the navy. For the White House interview Wyman had ordered a tailored navy uniform and appeared as "Captain Wyman" with the Princess when she greeted the President.

Said He Was Demented.

When Dr. Adolf Lorenz, orthopedic surgeon of Vienna, made a return visit to New York several years ago and was hailed by thousands as a "bloodless surgeon," Wyman attached himself to the suite of the Viennese surgeon. He once assumed a close association with Harold F. McCormick, who discovered the imposition within twenty-four hours.

When Wyman was on trial in Brooklyn on the charge of impersonating a navy officer, Dr. John R. Roth, medical examiner and superintendent of Dannemora State Hospital for the Criminal Insane, where Wyman served a term for forgery, and Dr. Charles Stetson, who had Wyman among his charges on Ward's Island, testified that he was demented. They said he suffered from manic depressive insanity, which is recurrent and often comes suddenly. Both testified that they had charge of Wyman after he was convicted of forging the name of former United States Senator William M. Calder of Brooklyn to a recommendation.

Telling of his connection with the Valentino funeral, "Dr." Wyman said he had known Mr. Ullman for several years, and that he offered his services when Mr. Ullman was upset by the death of Valentino. Wyman denied that he ever had represented himself to be the physician of Pola Negri. He said that supposition probably grew out of the fact that he was in Mr. Ullman's apartment at the Hotel Ambasador when Miss Negri arrived from Hollywood to attend the funeral.

Some one came running to Mr. Ullman's suite, saying 'Miss Negri has fainted,'" he said. "I asked whether she had fainted or whether she was simply hysterical. I was told that she seemed to be hysterical and I only suggested that they give her some aromatic spirits of ammonia."

Explains Meeker Report.

Explaining how he happened to make public the report on the diagnosis and treatment of the case of Valentino by the actor's surgeon, Dr. Harold E. Meeker, Wyman said that Mr. Ullman caused fifty-seven copies of the Meeker report to be typed just before he departed for Hollywood with the body of the actor. Mr. Ullman, according to Wyman, asked him to distribute the report to the newspapers.

Wyman, to show that he was a bona fide doctor, exhibited what he said was a diploma, but concealed the name of the college. He said he got his degree in Virginia, but had to conceal his criminal record. He also told of having a degree of doctor of laws, but said he never had been admitted to the bar in New York State. Of his business he said he was "practicing law on neglect cases." He explained that he was adjusting accident cases.

He displayed what purported to be a canceled check for $1,000,000, bearing his signature, but concealed the name of the bank and the payee. He asserted that the money had passed through his hands in a real estate deal which he negotiated for "some clients." He showed other checks aggregating $540,000.

REPUDIATED BY ULLMAN.

Wyman Not His Representative, Says Valentino's Manager.

Special to The New York Times.

EL PASO, Texas, Sept. 5.—"If Dr. Sterling C. Wyman is presuming to act as a representative of mine he has no authority from me to do so, and no right to be in my office," said S. George Ullman, Rudolph Valentino's manager, here this afternoon on the funeral train that is carrying Valentino's body, his brother, his fiancée, Pola Negri, and others to Los Angeles.

"Wyman was very courteous and attentive to me during the funeral. He came to me last Sunday, saying that he represented the Flower Hospital. He showed a police badge and drove a police car, which he said was at my disposal. As we were leaving New York he repeated his wishes to be of service to me.

"I have wired Miss Estelle Dick, my secretary, for particulars of Wyman, with whom I have had no previous acquaintance. He told me he was Pola Negri's physician, but I found that was not true. In spite of his kind attentions to me, Wyman must be laboring under some derangement if he is asserting that he represents me in any manner."

The funeral party is due in Los Angeles tomorrow afternoon.

Will Rogers Wants America A Nation of High Fliers

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

LONDON, Sept. 5.—I see where Mr. Coolidge says if Europe doesn't disarm he will build another airship. Just as well start it as soon as labor gets rested up from their holiday, for nobody here is going to do any disarming.

The way to make them disarm is to start building and quit begging them to disarm.

Them game fish up there in that lake has giv Cal some new backbone.

WILL ROGERS.

FIFTY ARE ACCUSED IN CITY MILK INQUIRY

SOME CHARGES SPECIFIC

Investigators Still Hope Kautzmann Will Give Aid—Doner Trial Date May Be Set Tomorrow.

The names of fifty persons accused of being implicated in the milk graft in the Health Department will be given to former Justice Charles H. Kelby of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, named by Mayor Walker as a special investigator, upon his return after Labor Day from a three weeks' vacation spent at Garrison, N. Y., it was made known yesterday.

The accusations involve men whose graft activities are said to have extended over the entire city, as well as former Health Department officials charged with petty collections from milk dealers. The mass of material which will be handed Judge Kelby has been collected during his absence by his associates in the investigation.

Some of the charges are specific, it is said, and the facts have been verified and are supported by affadivits. Others are unsupported accusations, based upon hearsay, which will require further investigation. It will be undertaken at once and whatever action the facts warrant will be taken, it was said yesterday.

Frederick W. Kautzmann, former Health Department inspector, convicted in General Sessions of accepting a bribe, is scheduled to be sentenced by Judge Max Levine tomorrow. Officials said yesterday they entertained hopes that he would decide to turn State's evidence in an effort to save himself from the maximum sentence of from five to ten years in Sing Sing which his conviction warrants. In case he makes a confession, Chief Assistant District Attorney Ferdinand Pecora will move tomorrow for the postponement of his sentence.

Mr. Pecora is still at a loss to understand what caused Kautzmann's abrupt change of front after he sent a note from the Tombs in which he said he was willing to make a clean breast of everything he knew in connection with the milk graft. When he reached Mr. Pecora's office he protested his innocence of wrongdoing and declared he knew nothing. One story which has reached the prosecutor's office is that when Kautzmann was first mentioned in the scandal he and two other Health Department officials were seen calling on a political leader whom they importuned to aid them in calling off further action.

Mr. Pecora will ask Judge Levine tomorrow to set a date for the trial of Samuel Doner, alleged "king of the cream bootleggers," whose testimony was largely instrumental in obtaining the convictions of former Assistant Corporation Counsel William H. Kehoe and Kautzmann. It is expected that dates for the trials of Aaron Schwartz and Morris Kahn, former Health Department chemists accused of making false reports on samples of bootleg cream submitted for analysis, also will be set.

TO AID OPENING OF SCHOOLS

Parent Committees Will Help to Get Children Registered Early.

A campaign for early registration of New York school children this month was announced yesterday by the United Parent Associations, which embrace a membership of 30,000 parents in this city. The parents will work in cooperation with the Board of Education and the New York City Principals' Association. Committees of parents have been formed to make house-to-house calls on families having children of school age, and to urge them to have the children register early.

Classes in the public schools will begin on Sept. 13. The schools will be open on Sept. 8, 9 and 10 for registration. Early registration, it is pointed out by those conducting the campaign, will prevent the handicap suffered by pupils who come late and miss essential preliminary instruction.

POLICE INSPECTOR SEIZED.

Two Firemen and a Patrolman Also Charged With Drunkenness.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, Sept. 5.—A police inspector, two firemen and a patrolman were among the large number of persons arrested here today. All four are scheduled for a hearing before Recorder Corio tomorrow.

James MacNamee of 803 Danberry Street, Philadelphia, who gave his occupation as policeman, was arrested and held in $15 bail on a charge of drunkenness. Patrick Dougherty of 20 Bellevue Avenue gave his occupation as fireman. Charles McKenamin, another arrested for drunkenness, is a former city fire captain and now a fireman. Edward Reilly, arrested as being drunk, was listed as a Philadelphia police inspector.

Bay State Auto Fatalities Mount.

BOSTON, Sept. 5 (AP).—Seventeen persons were killed in automobile accidents in Massachusetts last week, an increase of three over the previous week and of two over the corresponding week in 1925. Motor vehicle fatalities in the State in August totaled 63, as compared with 82 in August, 1925. Fatalities for the year to Sept. 1 were 462, a decrease of 47 from the corresponding period last year.

500,000 RETURNS IN STAGGER CENSUS

TABULATION TO BEGIN SOON

Transit Project, Sponsored by Dr. Harris, Due to Be Considered Next Month.

EMPLOYERS' AID REQUESTED

Commissioner Urges That Filled Out Forms Be Sent In to the Committee Immediately.

Success of the transit census, taken by a special committee under the direction of Dr. Louis I. Harris, Health Commissioner, was announced yesterday. It was said that the so-called stagger plan to relieve congestion on rapid transit lines, to which the census is a necessary preliminary, would be ready for consideration by October.

More than 500,000 individual returns from workers in Manhattan, giving the hours of arrival at and departure from work and the transit lines used by each, had been received, Dr. Harris said. Dr. Louis I. Dublin, statistician of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, has made arrangements for the tabulation and analysis of the returns on the census cards.

Punched cards, which can be run through machines, will be used in tabulating the returns. These cards will show, by means of the location of the holes punched, the number of employes of a firm, the transit lines used by these employes, the zone location of the firm and the time of arrival and departure from work of the employes. The process of registering all the returns will take about three weeks.

The Health Department squad of inspectors and nurses, which has been checking up on employers who have neglected to send in returns, will continue the work this week in the district south of Fourteenth Street, where there are still some gaps in the census figures.

"The census is practically finished," Dr. Harris said. "We asked for a half million individual returns before we attempted to assemble facts. We have more than that now, but, as we know that certain sections and industries have a scanty representation, we will retain the squad from the Health Department for two more weeks to canvass localities where we need more data.

"Many firms have held up the census pending return of executives. Others have taken a census inventory on only a part of their force or some of the concerns in the buildings under their supervision. It would help the committee greatly if such forms as have been gathered already were returned immediately. Big buildings, which are an important link in the stagger census, have adopted this policy. The Singer Building and the Pennsylvania Building have broken the Fifth Avenue Building's 98 per cent. record return. They have sent in reports covering all occupants."

Speaking of the possibility of an early initiation of the stagger plan, Dr. Dublin said:

"Compiling census statistics will require three weeks. Unless there is a material setback, the stagger plan should be ready for consideration in October, provided an examination of statistics shows that staggering traffic is a feasible move. When the statistical results are completed, and we know the present traffic densities, Major Matthews of the New York State Transit Commission will call in representatives of key industries and transit company representatives and show them the facts."

THINKS HE IS BEING PURSUED

Shoemaker, Returning to Cincinnati From Germany, Found Dazed.

Frank Kues, a 62-year-old shoemaker, who was returning from Germany to his home at 410 Reading Road, Cincinnati, was taken from the Grand Central Terminal to Bellevue Hospital yesterday afternoon and placed in the psycopathic ward for observation. The action followed complaints that Kues was suffering from delusions of persecution.

According to the Travelers' Aid Society, he had been walking about the Pennsylvania Station dazed when a member of the society offered to help him. When Kues explained that his home was in Cincinnati the society took him to the Grand Central, thinking to put him aboard a train.

All the way across town, it was said, Kues believed that some one was pursuing him. He told how he had arrived from Germany the day before and registered at a hotel. Afraid of the lights in the hotel lobby, he had gone into the street and wandered about until morning. He did not remember the name of his ship nor the name of his hotel.

FIGHTING PRISONER ESCAPES

Dempsey 'Challenger' Caught Again After Breaking Locks of Cell.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, Sept. 5.—William J. Zeller of Palmyra, N. J., the husky individual who defied the police here yesterday when they endeavored to take him from a padded cell in the city jail, after he had wrecked the cell and barricaded himself inside, and who was induced to leave only by the exercise of strategy and conveyed to the county insane asylum at Smith's Landing, escaped from that institution tonight by breaking the locks of his cell door and felling an attendant.

LABOR AND RELIGION ALIKE IN THEIR AIMS

Speakers at Special Services in St. John's Say Common Object Is to Aid Masses.

Dean Robbins Shows How Its Work Is Closely Allied With Trade Unionism.

Services appropriate to Labor Sunday were held yesterday afternoon at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. The speakers, representing religion and the education of labor, linked the ideals and methods of organized labor and organized religion with a common object—the improvement of living conditions among the masses.

"The Carpenter of Nazareth, who proclaimed that all men are the sons of God, made toil an expression of the divine in man," said Spencer Miller Jr., Secretary of the Workers' Education Bureau of America. "His teachings, which have so profoundly shaped the course of Western civilization and are the very foundation of the Christian churches, are as well the basis of the four great ideals of labor.

"Foremost among these ideals is craftsmanship, the expression of the creative instinct in man. When Jesus said that man was created 'in the image and likeness of God,' he meant that man resembled the Creator in his ability to bring into being new forms from old substances. The finest craftsmanship represents the highest excellence in skill—the achievement of the true artist.

"The second great ideal of labor is that of brotherhood. It is a part of the principle and practice of every association of labor. The name brotherhood is used to describe many of these associations. It is the expression of the universality of labor itself. 'The Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of Man,' which Jesus proclaimed, has become the very cornerstone of labor.

Freedom Sought by Labor.

"The third great ideal is that of freedom. To be free to develop one's abilities to the highest is the goal of every man. Labor has sought a freedom to work in cooperation with its fellows without hindrance and to negotiate collectively for its common interests. Labor has sought freedom from too long hours of toil to enjoy a leisure and refreshment of the body. Labor has sought freedom to dream, to think and to declare its thoughts according to its own conscience.

"The fourth of the great ideals of labor is education. Labor early realized that government by the people meant education of the people. Students of our national history record the fact that 100 years ago it was the courageous and far seeing advocacy of free education by labor which was responsible in part for the establishment of our great system of public instruction. This ideal of universal free education for the children of all the people has had a more recent counterpart in labor's ideal for adult education, which would make of education a new, regenerative force in our society by making it a continuous and vitalizing power throughout life. Education thus conceived becomes an adventure in social living."

The Rev. Dr. Charles K. Gilbert, Secretary of the Social Service Commission of the Episcopal Diocese of New York, discussed the Church's place in the industrial world.

"Many people hold today that the Church is a negligible factor in the industrial life," he said. "That may be, but an increasing number of serious-minded Christian people do not want such a state of affairs, and a new determination is seen in the Church to find a way by which the Church's contribution can be made. The incentive to the Church is the fact that the principles now followed will not allow peace to prevail in industry.

Where Church Can Help.

"There must be something wrong with the existing plan when men whose interests are mutual are engaged in bitter and destructive warfare. Such warfare will continue just so long as Christian people represented in the churches are backward in entering the picture and seeking to solve the problem with the methods available to the Church.

"Christian sentiment must not hesitate to register itself in laws to end child industry and the monotonous sacrifice of human life such as we see in coal mines and similar places of work. The Church must develop the people's minds so that they will insist that the human right to live takes the lead over the matter of extra dividends."

The Very Rev. Dr. Howard Chandler Robbins, Dean of the Cathedral, said he found much that organized labor and organized religion had in common and spoke for a continuance of their relationship.

"The labor union stands for the efficiency of group action and so does the Church," he said. "We are members one of another, and we have long ago learned that when we bear that fact in mind and act accordingly we gain greatly in efficiency. Organized labor wants to do away with child labor and sweat shop labor, to ensure to the worker a living wage and to protect him in accident, sickness and old age. It wants to provide him with all the elements of a good life. So does organized religion when it is true to its program. We must always remember that Christianity has an earthly as well as a heavenly hope."

The international effect of labor was praised by Dr. Robbins. "It can, I believe, be counted upon in any final adjustment of international indebtedness and of tariff restrictions," he said. "The cause of labor, like the cause of religion, is one the wide world over, and American labor will do well to see to it that, in so far as is possible, the standard of living of its comrades in England and on the Continent is not unduly depressed. For here again it is greatly true that we are members one of another, and that if one member suffer all the others suffer with it."

WANTS US IN LEAGUE.

Dr. Robertson Says, However, That It Won't Bring the Millennium.

While expressing himself in favor of the League of Nations, the Rev. Dr. Archibald T. Robertson, professor in the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Ky., in preaching yesterday morning in the First Presbyterian Church, Fifth Avenue and Twelfth Street, asserted that it "won't bring the millennium." Dr. Robertson said he was happy over the efforts being made at Geneva to have America enter the League because "we have international responsibilities."

"We have to have regulations and prohibitions," he said. "We must have limitations, but we cannot get the millennium from them. What we must have is regeneration."

Pastor Notes Aversion to Toil; Finds Bible Requires Six Days

PERTH AMBOY, N. J., Sept. 5.—Preaching on "Our Growing Aversion to Work," the Rev. Dr. Frederick D. Niedermeyer in the First Presbyterian Church this morning said that work was necessary for physical, mental and spiritual health, for worship and service and for one's rise above mediocrity.

"The primary teaching of the fourth commandment," he said, "is the observance of the Sabbath day, but we are not doing violence to Scripture when we emphasize its requirement that six days we shall labor. While there is a noticeable disregard of the Lord's day, there is no popular tendency to work seven days a week. The modern trend is away from labor and toward working even less than the Bible's required six days.

"Too many people want the rewards of labor without paying the price in toil. On many sides we hear demands for shorter hours, fewer days of work and more leisure time, even though most of us make no constructive use of the leisure we already possess, and few are the persons who on Labor Day set themselves tasks for self-improvement."

ADVANCE OF LABOR PRAISED BY PASTOR

Dr. Wagner Says Unionism Now Uses Peaceful Methods to Settle Disputes.

REFERS TO BRITISH STRIKE

Rise of Organized Workers Is Called One of Marvels of the Last Two Centuries.

"Labor's Advance" was the topic of a sermon by the Rev. Dr. C. Everett Wagner, who preached the Labor Sunday sermon yesterday at the West Side M. E. Church, 461 West Forty-fourth Street. He said:

"A most commendable advance that organized labor has made is its method of obtaining its demands through arbitration instead of violence. It has increased confidence in the value of a peaceful method instead of force. A striking example of this occurred in England at the time of the general strike. With millions out on a strike, all of the millions of workers kept sufficient control of themselves so that they did not resort to violence.

"Likewise in America, the organized labor groups are becoming more intelligent and believe a peaceful method to be the only one by which they can obtain their rights. This nation as a whole is indebted to organized labor for the lessening of bloodshed during strikes.

"One of the next steps needed in the solution of the industrial problem is the creating of a new method of settling disputes between labor and capital without resorting to a strike. It would have to be fair to all parties—the general public, the employer and the employe. The costs of strikes are enormously high, but there has not been devised in the United States a scheme which would provide justice for the workingmen without using the strike.

"The rise of the laboring people has been one of the marvels of the past two centuries. Like the Israelites who had been slaves of the Egyptians, the working class has gone into the land of Canaan of shorter hours, higher wages, recognized rights and greater opportunities. Organized labor has had its Pharaohs to struggle with, its Dead Sea to cross, and its wilderness to go through before it could attain its present standing. The ideal of brotherhood has been to workingmen what Moses was to the Israelites in their emancipation.

"Labor's adolescent problems have been largely solved. It now remains to be seen how they will develop into full manhood. Like every individual and every group, they must keep before them the brotherhood of man for all groups and not theirs alone. Justice must be measured out to all."

BIDS US SEEK GOD FIRST.

Father Peters Says Other Things Will Then Fall in Line.

Special to The New York Times.

Father Peters remarked that when Christ tells us that we cannot serve both God and mammon, we must make our choice.

"Every one feels something of reproach in today's gospel," he said. "But we should not be too hard upon ourselves. The choice which is represented to us is not always clear cut. We are presented with the ordinary routine of life. Right and wrong are frequently mixed up in many things. The voices of God and mammon both speak within us, and it seems at times that both of them have claims. It is only by keeping our heads clear that we shall find the true path to follow.

"It is for us to keep in mind that we are to tune ourselves to the Kingdom of God first; other things will then fall in line. Having done that, we may expect to rely upon the guidance of the Holy Spirit, who will inspire us to choose the right path among the really intricate paths of life."

TALKS ON LABOR GOOD-WILL

Rev. H. R. Gold Finds Growing Desire to Avoid Conflict.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., Sept. 5.—In his sermon on "Labor and Goodwill," preached at the Trinity Lutheran Church here, the Rev. Howard R. Gold said:

"There is an increased recognition of the principle that for any industry to be efficient it must be carried on in an atmosphere of good-will. This condition has been created by the belief among a growing number of leaders, both of employers and employes, that all purposes are best served by avoiding conflict.

"Industrial problems are solvable where there is a will to be fair. So often in the past the difficulty has been that knowledge and intelligence far outran the willingness to apply the golden rule in industry as in other spheres."

Eliminate Causes of Industrial Unrest, Dr. Stewart Urges Workers and Employers

Three solutions for industrial unrest were offered yesterday by the Rev. Dr. George Stewart in his sermon at the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, Madison Avenue and Seventy-third Street.

"The first solution," he said "is for the employers to so entrench themselves behind financial and administrative power that it is impossible for the workers to make any adequate protest, either against the hours or wages. This sort of thing is gradually passing. It is a relic of the days of slavery and serfdom.

"The second means of establishing peace is by establishing the balance of power between the workers and employers, each party making themselves so powerful that the other dare not start an attack. This is largely the method employed in the present day. It is a hazardous method, and manifested itself in the political and military world in the World War and in the industrial world by a running guerrilla fight. It is characterized by paralyzing strikes and lockouts.

"The third solution remains for securing industrial peace and that is with an open mind and set patience to explore the causes of industrial unrest and to seek to remove it. Because strikes haxe existed even before the time when Moses led the Children of Israel out of bondage across the Red Sea because they were forced to work inhuman hours at brutalizing tasks, labor leaders are arousing their followers to protest. Just because cholera, malaria and smallpox and typhoid fever have been endemic in certain sections of the world for centuries is no reason why the medical profession should sit down before them in helplessness. Doctors now know that malaria is curable and they are eliminating the cause. Just so, the thinkers and industrial pioneers in this and in other lands, both among workers and employers, will be able to discover the causes of industrial unrest and to eliminate them."

WANTS CEREMONIES TO 'DIGNIFY' LABOR

INDIVIDUALITY SUPPRESSED

Preacher Suggests Recognition of Services in Public Manner as Spur to Interest.

The Rev. Charles Stelzle, who founded "Labor Sunday" nearly twenty years ago when he was Superintendent of the Department of Church and Labor of the National Presbyterian Church, spoke on "Dignifying Labor" yesterday morning in the West End Presbyterian Church, 105th Street and Amsterdam Avenue.

"The American workingman is undoubtedly enjoying more of the comforts of life today than ever before," he said, "but the processes of manufacture and the activities of the efficiency expert are more and more making a machine of the worker.

"This minute specialization in industry demands the development of some other interest in the worker's task, so that it may not become too monotonous. Many of our industrial workers are finding relief in jazz. The worker should be helped and directed in his desire to live a more individual life. The worker is not a free agent. He does what he is told. Therefore, the responsibility for the enrichment of the worker's life lies largely with the boss. This should not result in paternalism but rather in friendly cooperation.

"Many industrial workers today are tired of their jobs. They look with longing at the white-collared class and wish they had their jobs. The task of the industrial worker should be so dignified that he will not only take greater pride in it but urge his children to enter it.

"There are several ways in which the dignity of labor may be recognized and developed. To use the building trade as an illustration, the following suggestions are offered:

"First, there might be a public ceremony at which public buildings are dedicated and at which at least representatives of the workers have a place upon the program.

"Second, all the workers should be invited to a special function, possibly a big supper, within the building itself, wherever possible, on which occasion their part in the construction of the building should be emphasized.

"Third, when important buildings are either dedicated or turned over to their owners the names of all the workers on it should be printed in the newspapers as well as the name of the owner, the architect and the contractor.

"Fourth, at the completion of the building the outstanding man in each trade working on that building should be selected to receive some token in recognition of his high qualities.

"Fifth, much more should be made of the induction of apprentices into the ranks of journeymen. Usually, the only sign of a change is in the size of the pay envelope which the apprentice receives at the end of the week. He should also receive a well-gotten up certificate, signed by some well-known man in the trade whom all men recognize and honor."

INDUSTRY'S RELIGIOUS NEED

The abandoning of suspicion and distrust on the part of both employers and employes is the only solution of modern labor problems, declared the Rev. Dr. Charles R. Brown, Dean of the Yale Divinity School, who spoke yesterday morning on "Religion and Industry" at the Collegiate Reformed Church of St. Nicholas, Fifth Avenue and Forty-eighth Street.

"The wiping out of this distrust," Dean Brown said, "cannot be brought about by any mere change in the technique of industry. It requires something deeper and more fundamental, something spiritual and abiding which religion alone can teach.

"A strife as bitter as that between labor and capital cannot be ended by any cheap and new-fangled technical social remedies which may be sold at the street corner. The molding of Christian character through religion is alone the basis of a permanent peace, and that all-important fact should be recognized in our celebration of Labor Day.

"There is right and wrong on both sides, of course, for no unprejudiced person can believe that all the justice is on one side and all the injustice on the other. Therefore, good-will and brotherly regard, a spirit of cooperation and partnership are needed to show each disputant the position of the other."

CHURCH AS A MEMORIAL.

Dr. Goodell Says It Should Remind Us of God's Aid to Us.

Recalling the stone that Samuel set as a memorial to the help he had received from God, the Rev. Dr. Charles L. Goodell, General Secretary of the Commission on Evangelism of the Federal Council of Churches, in a sermon yesterday at the Marble Collegiate Reformed Church, Fifth Avenue and Twenty-ninth Street, urged his congregation to look upon the Church as a memorial to the "guiding influence that has helped you."

"It is not more light that we need but more sight, that we may apprehend what is around us," said the pastor. "We need to realize increasingly in the fret and bustle of life that there are mercies that God has granted us."

SAYS CHRIST'S TOIL GAVE LABOR DIGNITY

Dr. M. C. Morgan of Detroit Has Accepted Call to Fifth Av. Presbyterian Church.

SCORES MEN OF LEISURE

Their Scorn of Work Is Not In Harmony With Christian Doctrine, He Avers.

So-called gentlemen of leisure should remember that the Saviour of the World toiled with His hands and in so doing dignified labor for all time, declared the Rev. Dr. Minot C. Morgan, retiring pastor of the Fort Street Presbyterian Church, Detroit, Mich., and co-pastor-elect of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, Manhattan, in a sermon yesterday morning in the Broadway Congregational Tabernacle, at Fifty-sixth Street. Dr. Morgan will begin his pastorate here Oct. 3. Yesterday was the first time he preached in this city since he received the call last June. Dr. Morgan's text was: "Is not this the Carpenter?"

"The life of Jesus Christ is not just a bit of drama," said Dr. Morgan, "but the real life of a real man entering into every experience of man. The ancient world felt that labor was for slaves. The Greek philosophers taught that a working man was not of educated mind.

"Even today there are many who claim that the so-called gentleman of leisure outshines the man who works with his hands. And it is well for us to remember on this day, set apart to honor labor, that it is Jesus Christ who has dignified labor.

"The Bible says that if a man will not work he shall not eat. It matters not whether it is the artist or artisan, the tinker or the cobbler. If they do what their hands find to do, Christian doctrine teaches that they are doing their duty.

"Bunyan was a tinker; Carey a cobbler; Paul a tentmaker; Peter a fisherman; Jesus a carpenter.

"Only it is well for those who labor to remember that their toil is not the only kind of work. Perhaps the men who wield the pen may also be toilers. 'I imagine Bunyan never worked as hard as a tinker as he did grinding out 'Pilgrim's Progress.' I imagine tentmaking was more or less relaxation to St. Paul. And Peter, when he wanted something to do, said, 'Let's go fishing.'

"So, whatever be the toil that is ours, let us realize that it is God's opportunity given to us to serve. Let us not fritter away our lives in selfish indulgences.

"The Son of Man said, 'I came not to be ministered unto, but to minister.' May we follow in His footsteps. He who has toiled can speak to the toiler about rest and peace.

"Will you not come to Him who has toiled and suffered and died on the cross? Will you not go forward in the service of Him who was a carpenter, who is friend and who is Redeemer and Lord?"

Dr. and Mrs. Morgan and their children are guests at the Summer home of Mr. and Mrs. Roderick Aitken Dorman, Madison, N. J., brother and sister-in-law of Mrs. Morgan. Mr. Dorman, whose town home is at 211 West Fifty-sixth Street, is Treasurer of the tabernacle.

The Morgans leave this morning for Detroit.

EXHORTS THE CHURCH TO RETAIN VITAL FORCE

Dr. Kirk Says It Must Abandon Theological Argument to Hold the Younger Generation.

If religion is to remain a force in our lives and exert its influence over the straying younger generation the Church will have to abandon theological argument and strive for a real spiritual regeneration, according to the Rev. Dr. Harris E. Kirk of Baltimore, who spoke yesterday morning at the Brick Presbyterian Church, Fifth Avenue and Thirty-seventh Street. The average man has a crying need for something greater than mere intellectual proof, Dr. Kirk said.

"There are many who doubt Christianity because they question its foundation," he said. "The way we can get them to believe it is to prove that it is true. But even if we could convince the whole world of the truth of Christianity men would not be willing to accept it. They would still ask, 'How does the thing work?' 'How is it going to aid me?' 'How can I use it to become the kind of a man I want to be?' For every one man who believes in Christianity because it is proven true, there are a thousand who will follow it because they see it working in the lives of others.

"I don't believe that real spiritual power ever comes from abstract learning and knowledge. Some men acquire knowledge in the same manner that they acquire money. To devote a lifetime to gathering money is not praiseworthy, it is vulgar. And from some viewpoints the gathering of abstract knowledge, and especially theological knowledge, is just as vulgar. That which exercises people for good comes not from the mind but from the depths of their soul."

PICTURES HEAVEN AS A PLACE OF WORK

GOD CHOOSES MEN OF TOIL

Not Lazy Hermits or Unproductive Recluses, but Toilers Needed, Preacher Declares.

Work will be one of the features of Heaven, according to Bishop Edwin H. Hughes, of Chicago Area in the Methodist Church, who preached a Labor Day sermon yesterday at the Park Avenue Baptist Church, Park Avenue and Sixty-fourth Street.

"I believe," he said, "that after a short term of rest we will find ourselves engaged in everlasting activities of one sort or another. I think it would be terrible to have nothing to do.

"Exactly what sort of work we shall have I cannot say. When I was young one preacher used to insist that after death all men and women would be employed in the same sort of work they had been engaged in during their life on earth. Architects would plan the heavenly mansions, and bricklayers would build them. But this conception is hardly practical. What, for instance, would doctors and lawyers do in a land where no one was ever ill, or quarreled?

"Another doctrine I used to hear preached in my childhood was that the saints in Heaven would spend their time watching the work they had done on earth and possibly directing it. But this seems to me rather spookish and uncomfortable.

"And then not every one is successful and so could not look down with any pride from the balconies of Heaven upon his work.

"I wonder if there is not a sense in which our works go with us. If we do skimpy work here, will we not suffer for it in the next world? They say that Christ was silent for eighteen years after his first fame as a child. He was not. He was working in his father's carpenter shop. It is perhaps significant that the ratio of work days and Sundays is exactly the same as the ratio of the number of years Christ worked, and the number he preached, which was three.

"In the words of the poet, God is found by lifting the stone and cleaving the wood—by work, in work. Not in solitary, unproductive lifes, such as lazy hermits and parasitic recluses practice, but in labor. Every time God has chosen a man, he has taken a man in the midst of his toil. The apostles were shepherds, fishermen, &c., when Christ told them to follow him. Moses, too, was a shepherd. God is found only through work."

BISHOP DEPRECIATES POSITION OF HEALERS

Most self-styled healers and evangelists of today have a distorted notion of their importance in the world, according to Bishop Ernest G. Richardson of Atlanta, Ga., who preached yesterday morning at St. Paul's Methodist Church, West End Avenue at Eighty-sixth Street. He cited Mrs. Aimee MacPherson, the Los Angeles evangelist, as a conspicuous example of this type, which, he said, fails to realize that miracle-working is, after all "an inferior gift."

"Mrs. MacPherson was once a Methodist," he said. "But the Methodist Church wasn't good enough for her. She left it, built a magnificent temple, and attracted a vast following, wholly by placing emphasis on the spectacular side of religion. The psychology of the evangelist, of course, is sound. Were I to placard myself as a healer, and put a headline in the paper to that effect, we could have a much larger congregation than we have today.

"People flock about the self-styled healers, forgetting that in kindly deeds of service, the ordinary work of Christianity, we render the greatest service to the Lord.

"The knowledge of today is the ignorance of tomorrow. Knowledge vanishes; healing ceases; but love endures.

"Jesus never wrote a book, never organized his followers. He had no system of vice presidents, no executive committees, no corresponding secretary. There was no board of the Apostles. It is true they did have a treasurer, but he went wrong. When Jesus left the world, there was not a Bishop, not a church.

"Jesus told His disciples to go out into the world and love people. Christianity means no more and no less than that."

THINKS THAT MIRACLES HINT AT UNSEEN WORLD

Father Fadden Says It Is Hard to Believe in Hereafter Without Some Proof.

A sermon on miracles was preached in St. Patrick's Cathedral yesterday morning by the Rev. Father Francis Fadden. Speaking of the miracles of Christ, he said:

"The main purpose of these miracles was to draw the attention of men to the existence of two worlds: the world that we see and the world that we do not see.

"The trouble with men and women is that they begin to think in terms only of the former world. Nobody comes back from the grave with pictures to illustrate the life after death: nobody comes back with the story of what goes on behind the veil and, because of this lack of visual and oral proof, it is hard for us to believe and to have faith.

"If man studies the teachings of Christ with an open heart he is all right; but if he questions the wisdom of God, the predominance of God, the right of God, His power to perform miracles, he's in bad faith.

"Christ performed His miracles to remind the world of scientists, the world of college professors, the world of novelists, the world of magazine writers that the world is His. And that is what the Church teaches, the Church that is 2,000 years ancient. It believes in the miracles and believes in the power of Christ to perform them."

ORTHODOX AFRICAN SYNOD ENDS WITH MASS

A pontifical mass, marking the closing of a synod of the African Orthodox Church, was celebrated yesterday morning by the Most Rev. George Alexander at the African Orthodox Church, 595 Classon Avenue, Brooklyn.

The Rev. O. W. Hollinsed, who preached the sermon, told the congregation that the world judged success "too much by fruits of the flesh rather than by fruits of the spirit."

"The fruits of the flesh have made history and have left deep-cut brands on each of us," he said. "The disasters that befell Babylon, Jerusalem, Sodom and Gomorrah are examples. Without spiritual love there would be no joy nor peace. I do not mean the kind of love that flowers in the marriage bureau and dies in the divorce court. I mean an ecstacy of soul that is quite apart from material considerations."

An elaborate procession preceded the opening of the mass, which occupied two hours. Three Bishops walked in the procession, with several deacons and minor officers of the church. A mixed choir of thirty voices furnished the music.

"If you liked Edgeworth twenty years ago, you'll like it now—unless your taste has changed. Edgeworth hasn't."

GAY COSTUME BALL AT EAST HAMPTON

FIRST PRIZE TO MRS. KRECH

EAST HAMPTON, L. I., Sept. 5.—The costume ball at the Maidstone Club here last night was a gorgeous spectacle, participated in by 1,000 members of the Summer colony. Gay little gypsies, dashing Spanish beauties, pierrots and pierrettes, grand dames and beaux in magnificent court costumes of every period, East Indian rulers, Arab sheiks, Persian women, Chinese mandarins, Czechoslovakian peasants, Scotch kilties, sailor boys and old-fashioned girls danced in the ballroom, presenting a bewildering scene of kaleidoscopic effect.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Appleton, in Hallowe'en pierrot and pierrette costums of blue and orange and yellow and orange, led the grand march.

A storm of applause greeted the announcement by the judges that Mrs. Shepard Krech had been chosen as the most beautiful woman in the throng. Wearing the white wig and blue bouffant silk dress of the period of Louis XVI, Mrs. Krech was seated in a sedan chair borne by Ellery James, William Carson, Lucius Robinson and Auguste Cordier in smart blue and red uniforms.

Three Sisters Win Prizes.

Phelan Beale, in hussar's full-dress uniform; Mrs. Beale, in handsome court costume of red velvet trimmed with pearls, her long train carried by her twin sisters, Mrs. Henry Clarkson Scott and Miss Maude Bouvier, as pages, dressed in black velvet with wide lace collars and black velvet caps, also received prizes.

Winthrop Gardiner, in a strikingly rich embroidered rajah costume, and Mrs. Gardiner, in a stately Spanish costume with a tall headdress of black lace, were also recipients.

Others who won prizes were Mrs. James A. Moffett, who wore an Egyptian trousered costume of green chiffon and a close cap of gold mesh on which two peacock feathers were set at a jaunty angle; Miss Judith Hamlin, in a ruffled pink silk dress and poke bonnet of 1830, and Miss Jane Zeveley, in pale green satin folly costume, a white ruff around her neck and a draped green and white cap with a large green pompom set rakishly on her head.

Mrs. Frederic W. Procter wore a cunning black velvet kitten with pink-lined ears, a long black tail and a huge pink bow on its neck. Her husband and Ralph Bartlett appeared as a big chestnut horse which pranced about, stopping to do a Charleston now and then. They were all prize winners.

Harold W. Nichols created a sensation as Robinson Crusoe with his abbreviated fur suit, fur cap, fur moccasins, fur parasol, big gun and battle axe, the axe being thrust in his belt. The judges had no difficulty in awarding him a prize.

A costume worn by Sherman Jenney took first prize for originality. He represented the South African Reception Committee to the Prince of Wales and wore a skin thrown over his shoulder, a wing collar on his bare neck, a shining top hat, black shoes and gray spats.

Other prizes were given to Charles C. Nadal, as a stern policeman, and to Charles Dickerman in the familiar "time to retire" costume.

The Arrangements Committee included Mrs. George Ethridge, Chairman; Mrs. Harry Hamlin, Mrs. Clarence Alcott, Mrs. Edward Perot Jr., Mrs. James Zeverley, Mrs. John N. Cole, Mrs. Robert Appleton, Mrs. Francis Newton and Mrs. Hamilton King.

Many Dinners Precede the Ball.

Before the ball Mr. and Mrs. Harry L. Hamlin entertained fifty dinner guests at the club. Mr. and Mrs. Edward E. Bartlett were hosts to thirty-five. Others who gave dinners there included Mr. and Mrs. Frank D. Hyde, Mr. and Mrs. William C. Dickerman, Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Kelsey, Mrs. Mumford, Mr. and Mrs. Auguste J. Cordier, Mr. and Mrs. Robert T. Swaine, Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Benjamin, Mr. and Mrs. M. Taylor Pyne and Mr. and Mrs. James McCann.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold O. Barker were dinner hosts to fifty at their home, taking their guests to the ball. Mr. and Mrs. David Helier also had dinner guests at home.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward F. Hutton entertained tonight at their cottage in Southampton with a performance by the Adolph Bohm Ballet Intime. On the program with Mr. Bohm were Vera Mirova, Russian dancer; Maria Montero, Spanish dancer, and Marcia Preble, Greek dancer.

WOOD'S A NERVOUS AILMENT

His Physician Issues Statement on Illness of General's Son.

EVANSVILLE, Ind., Sept. 5 (AP).—Osborne C. Wood, son of Major Gen. Leonard Wood, who left an Eastern career of financial escapades several weeks ago to go to work as a laborer and learn the refrigeration business here "from the ground up," is suffering from a nervous disorder, it became known today.

Utmost secrecy surrounded the ailment which caused the admission of the son of the Governor General of the Philippine Islands to a local hospital on Friday until his physician, Dr. J. F. Wynn, today issued a statement.

"Mr. Wood is suffering from a physical and nervous depression, due to close pursuance of his studies and professional work here plus a slight amount of dissipation superinduced by an acute upper respiratory infection," the statement said.

SOVIET FUND FOR MINERS.

Red Leaders Order 3,000,000 Rubles Contribution to British Strikers.

LONDON, Sept. 15.—A London Times special says that a meeting of the presidents of the Russian trade unions yesterday decided to immediately dispatch 3,000,000 rubles to the British coal miners. The money will be compulsorily deducted from the wages of workers in Soviet Russia.

The Soviet press describes this as the most effective method of convincing the miners that their best friends are in Soviet Russia and not the British trade unionists, who, it says, have persistently betrayed them.

To Celebrate "Stunt Night."

Special to The New York Times.

RYE, N. Y., Sept. 5.—The Peningo Club on Milton Point will celebrate the "annual stunt night" tomorrow. Only talent from the club will be seen and heard.

Cowen.

Miss Mildred Berkowitz, sister of the bride, will be maid of honor and Harold Manshel will be his brother's best man. The ceremony will be followed by a wedding breakfast.

Mr. Manshel is a graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, class of 1922, and is a member of the Zeta Beta Tau Fraternity. After a wedding trip through the West, the couple will live at 33 North Arlington Avenue, East Orange, N. J.

REV. R. J. MACALPINE, RADIO PREACHER, DIES

BUFFALO, N. Y., Sept. 5 (AP).—The Rev. Robert J. MacAlpine, pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church, Buffalo, widely known radio preacher, died suddenly today at his Summer home at Waverly Beach, Ontario.

Dr. MacAlpine's congregation was reputed to be the third largest of its denomination in the United States, and he was known to thousands of radio listeners in this country and in Canada who heard his weekly discourses broadcast through Station WGR, Buffalo.

Dr. MacAlpine was reading when he collapsed. He was carried to his room and a physician summoned. He died without regaining consciousness.

Dr. MacAlpine went to his Summer home for his vacation about six weeks ago. He was to have preached the first sermon of the Fall season next Sunday. He was 51 years old and a native of Ontario.

From a small church with only a few hundred parishioners, Dr. MacAlpine was instrumental in making the Central Presbyterian Church the largest Protestant church in Western New York and one of the largest Presbyterian churches in the United States.

Dr. MacAlpine was a native of Cedarville, Ontario. Originally intending to be a druggist, he obtained a degree of pharmacy at the University of Toronto in 1892. He later received the degrees of B. A. and M. A., from the same university and in 1901 he studied theology at Knox College, receiving his ordination to the Presbyterian Ministry the following year.

His first charge was that of pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Owen Sound, Ontario, where he remained for five years. He was pastor of North Church in Cleveland, Ohio from 1909 until 1914 when he went to the Central Church in Buffalo. There he increased the membership of the congregation from 500 to more than 2,500. He was a member of several national organizations of his church and a thirty-second degree Mason. His writings included "Bible Readings and Prayers," and "What Is True Religion?" His wife, whom he married in 1903, was formerly Miss Mary Margaret Stewart, daughter of T. J. Stewart, M. P., of Hamilton, Ontario.

Miss Katherine Flaherty a Bride.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Sept. 5.—The wedding of Miss Katherine Pauline Flaherty, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jeremiah Flaherty, and John Louis Fuchs, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Fuchs of Dunellen, took place yesterday in St. John's Church, Dunellen. The Rev. Michael Duffy of St. Raphael's Church, New York, cousin of the bride, officiated, assisted by the Rev. Thomas Hannon, curate of the church. Miss Eleanor Fuchs, sister of the bridegroom, was maid of honor and Carl Fuchs, brother, was best man. Casper Fuchs and Paul Fuchs were ushers. Miss Mary Flaherty, sister of the bride, was the soloist. A reception was held at the home of the bride's parents.

Senator McKinley Grows Worse.

MARTINSVILLE, Ind., Sept. 5 (AP).—Senator William B. McKinley of Illinois, who has been ill for two weeks at a local sanitarium, was worse this evening, according to a statement of his physicians. His respiration was bad and he was delirious all day. A large number of messages wishing the Senator a speedy recovery and congratulating him on his seventieth birthday were received.

TEST OF NEW CABLE TO ENGLAND BEGINS

Business Over Western Union's High Speed Line Expected Thursday or Friday.

Initial tests of the world's fastest transatlantic cable began a few minutes before 6 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The tests were conducted from the cable offices of the Western Union, at Hammels, near Rockaway Beach, Queens, by engineers of the Telegraph Construction and Maintenance Company of London, England, manufacturers of the cable.

The manufacturers' tests will continue today and the first cablegrams by the Western Union, for whom the cable was constructed, will not be dispatched until tomorrow. The Western Union tests will be conducted for two or three days, and it was said yesterday that the regular commercial business will probably be transmitted Thursday or Friday.

It was not until shortly before 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon that the cable ship Colonia picked up the buoyed oceanic end of the cable, 240 miles off Rockaway Beach, and spliced it with the New Yorw shore end. The engineers had expected that the cable ends would be joined Friday, but because of storms and low visibility at sea, splicing was delayed.

The cable will be operated between New York and London at eight times the speed of any now in use between the two points. It has a transmission capacity of 2,600 letters a minute. As the sending mechanical equipment of the company is improved, the cable will be able to handle messages transmitted even faster, it was said.

The new line is the nineteenth transatlantic cable, and the eighth to be operated by the Western Union Company. It is 3,400 nautical miles long, and extends from New York to Bay Roberts, Newfoundland, thence across the Atlantic to Pnzance, England, and from there to London.

The New York end of the cable was brought to shore at Hammels on Wednesday. To protect the cable from the rocks and uneven ocean floor the off-shore section of the cable is three inches in diameter. The deep sea section is only one inch in diameter.

The new cable is sheathed in a wrapping of permalloy. This is an alloy of iron and nickel. This new wrapping prevents the leakage of current, and gives the new line of communication its great speed.

ASK EARLY ENROLMENT IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS

United Parents' Associations and Teachers to Open Drive—Registration This Week.

Thirty thousand parents, members of the seventy-four parents' associations affiliated with the United Parents' Association of Greater New York Schools, begin a campaign tomorrow morning, in cooperation with the Board of Education and the New York City Principals' Association, to obtain early registration of children in the public schools for the coming year.

School begins on Sept. 13, and all public schools of the city will be open Wednesday, Thursday and Friday for enrolment. Principals and teachers will be on duty at the school buildings from nine o'clock until four on these days, and committees of the United Parents' Associations will be in attendance to assist parents in their registration.

Superintendent of Schools, William J. O'Shea, in a communication to the United Parents' Association, says:

"When the parents of the city realize the enormous amount of work connected with registration, I am sure that they will do all in their power to cooperate. Every principal aims to arrange classes so that each student may have the maximum of personal instruction. Classes are made up as soon as registrations are closed and late comers upset the balance and retard the work of other students.

"A pupil who enters school late—even one day late—is likely to miss some essential instruction in a new subject. Although such omissions are frequently caught by instructors, the loss of the first few hours' class work may cause the pupil to fail and be forced to repeat a whole term."

Two men loitering in the shadows outside of a drug store at 874 Hopkinson Avenue, Brooklyn, last night while two women talked with the proprietor, Harry Rothberg, over the counter. When the women finished their purchase and left the store the two men stepped inside.

Rothberg had gone to the rear to shut up some cabinets. The men came up behind him, shoved pistols into his back and ordered him to keep quiet. The proprietor felt his watch being lifted from his pocket and heard one intruder going through the cash register.

ASBURY PARK, N. J., Sept. 6.—The Lyric Theatre, on Cookham Avenue, near Kingsley Street, was partly destroyed by fire earily today.

The fire started from unknown causes shortly after midnight. The district contains a large number of hotels, which were crowded over the week-end with holiday visitors.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

The Advance in Railway Shares and the Recovery in Foreign Exchange.

It is not often that the final week of the Summer season, the traditional low ebb of financial activity, has been marked by two such emphatic demonstrations as last week's rise in the railway shares and recovery in the foreign exchanges. Each took the market by surprise and it is possible that each foreshadows important developments in the Autumn.

That they should have occurred at a time when inertia is the usual rule on financial markets was a result of visible circumstances. Publication of the railway statements for July showed unexpected achievement in the way of earnings. Wall Street had believed that last year's midsummer results would probably be matched; but that total net operating income should have run, as it now appears to have done, more than 20 per cent. above July, 1925, this on top of a 33⅓ per cent. increase in that month over 1924, surpassed the most hopeful predictions.

In the field of foreign exchange there had been an even more unexpected turn of affairs. The very period that had been fixed anticipatively for a progressive movement of sterling rates against London, and for repetition of last Autumn's output of gold from the Bank of England, was marked by some of the largest receipts of gold by the Bank that have occurred this year and, along with that occurrence, had come evidence of distinct recovery in French finance and announcement of sweepingly drastic currency reform in Italy. Neither the railway share market nor the market for sterling, francs and lire had been moving in anticipation of such news. Prices of railway stocks had risen on the average less than half as far from the low point of the year as prices of industrials, and foreign exchange rates had been declining since the middle of August, on the theory that the French currency measures would be neutralized by failure to ratify the debt agreements and that England's purchases of grain and cotton, coming on top of the British trade unsettlement, would create a strain on London. Last week's action of the railway shares and the foreign exchanges was therefore not unreasonable.

The prosperity indicated for the railways is certainly no illogical result of the immense volume of transportation business, sustained and enlarged during two successive years and conducted with greater economy of operation than at any time since pre-war days. It does not insure the complete solution of the railway problem, even with the certainty of much greater earnings in the next few months, because the unequal distribution of results still leaves the so-called "weak roads" in a difficult position, from which they are not relieved by the Transportation act. But even with these properties the rise in revenue has been important; recovery in earning capacity from Edison El (8)...158¼ 147 158¼ +10¼

STERLING RECOVERY SURPRISES LONDON

Still Uncertain, However, if Gold Shipments to America Can Be Averted.

NO DEMAND FROM INDIA

LONDON, Sept. 5.—Sterling is recovering quite well from the recent depression in which the cable rate touched $4.85⅛, which was the lowest since January. The current rate is $4.85⅝, and the rally is ascribed not so much to the improved outlook for a settlement of the coal strike as to cessation of the recent heavy purchases of dollars by business houses, which are now more confident that coal imports from the United States will soon cease to be a factor in exchange.

Nearly 8,000,000 tons of coal have been imported since the beginning of May, a large proportion of which came from America. An abnormally heavy pressure was thus exerted on exchange, which in the view of bankers has held up better than there was reason to expect. But no further considerable recovery is anticipated. The market will be satisfied if the rate is maintained above the gold point, which is approximately $4.84¼.

October Will Test Market.

Last year the real test came in October, when the rate fell well below the gold point, resulting in large gold shipments from London to New York. It is quite possible that this experience may be repeated, but London is better protected now by higher interest rates than last year, when the bank rate was falling in the Autumn. The rate now is 1 per cent. above last Autumn, with no prospect of a reduction.

The Bank of England's stock of gold is still £7,000,000 less than a year ago, but its note circulation also is £3,690,000 lower and its reserve only £3,343,000 less. Therefore the Autumn is being entered upon with the bank in moderately good position and the prospect of it being still able to maintain its gold holdings by receipts from abroad.

Gold Shipments to India Have Ceased.

An important factor in the gold situation is the absence of Indian demand, there having been no important shipments to that country from either London or South Africa in several months, whereas India drew very heavily a year ago. No particular reason has been advanced for the virtual cessation of Indian gold shipments, but it is probably connected with the easy money rates in effect in India and some reduction in general prosperity. At any time, however, Indian gold demand may revive, but the market is hoping that, before this occurs, we shall have safely passed the most critical period of the year. As no gold shipments are now being made direct from Durban to India, most of the South African gold continues to be sent to the London market. Next Tuesday £280,000 will arrive from the Cape in the open market, together with £400,000 in sovereigns.

Currency notes outstanding at the end of the week aggregated £291,076,277, compared with £290,751,541 one week ago, and with £290,959,033 two weeks ago. The highest of the year to date was £303,566,376 in the week ended May 31; the lowest to date was £284,178,770 in the week ended Feb. 19.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Sept. 5.—Last week's receipts of gold at the Bank of England were £693,000. Of this £30,000 were sovereigns from South Africa and £393,000 bought in the open market.

The week's withdrawals were £515,000. This included £500,000 set aside for the South African Reserve Bank, £10,000 for Holland and £5,000 sent to an unstated destination.

Gold movements on foreign account at the Bank since the restoration of the gold standard have resulted in a net outgo just under £1,000,000. Since the Bank now holds £7,000,000 less than a year ago, there is a difference of £6,000,000 between the total loss on foreign account and in the Bank's actual holdings, compared with a year ago. This gold, however, although lost by the Bank of England, remains in the country, largely with other banks.

LOWER MONEY AT LONDON.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Sept. 5.—Owing to the recovery in the American exchange market, the money market is inclined to relax, especially as regards discount rates. At the same time there is little prospect of an appreciable easing of the position. For several weeks past the Treasury has issued more bills than it has paid off, thus definitely depriving the market of funds, while Autumn, with an increase in trade probable in the event of settlement of the coal strike, will keep money in good demand and on the short side.

The bank rate will need all the support which can be given during the next few months, and money rates will therefore not be allowed to fall away to any extent. The money market, in fact, is still very much under the control of the Bank of England and the Treasury.

Central Europe's Harvests Improve.

VIENNA, Sept. 5.—The fine weather which has prevailed throughout Europe during the past fortnight has greatly improved the harvest prospects. As a result, good average grain crops are expected, except in those districts which suffered from violent storms.

CONTINENTAL VIEW OF THE BRITISH POSITION

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

AMSTERDAM, Sept. 5.—As this market sees it, the British industrial position is entirely governed by the coal strike. Industry is not absolutely crippled by the lack of fuel, but the handicap is very formidable. Before the beginning of June, imports of coal into England were 130,000 tons weekly. In July the weekly rate was 650,000 tons, in August 945,000. England's own present production is 300,000 tons weekly.

But since the weekly British consumption of coal during the first four months of the year was 4,000,000 tons, the industrial results are evident. Working hours in many British industries have been reduced 20 to 50 per cent., while weekly railway receipts have fallen to £2,950,000 in July, as against £4,154,000 in the same month of 1925.

However, it is believed that as soon as the coal strike is ended a very great increase of activity in British industry will occur, at least temporarily. It will be helped by the favorable British crop prospects.

The continued and substantial gain of gold by the Bank of England, at a time when it was losing gold heavily last year, attracts much attention here. The possibility of its continuance will be soon tested, however, since imports of cotton and grain from America much larger than usual are expected in the Autumn.

These importations were largely postponed during recent months. No decrease in the London discount rate is expected; it is made impossible by the rise in American money rates.

TRADE RECOVERS ONLY GRADUALLY IN AUSTRIA

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

VIENNA, Sept. 5.—In general, the Austrian financial situation is improved. The budget outlook is particularly favorable, revenue for the first six months of 1926, as just reported, showing increase of 40,000,000 schillings, or $560,000, whereas expenditure did not increase perceptibly. The total number of unemployed in Austria at the end of August was 152,482, showing a slight decrease as compared with a month before, but being higher than a year ago.

On the other hand, several large manufacturing establishments have been forced to close down for long or short periods, involving the dismissal of work people and further increasing unemployment. The main hope maintained for the Austrian industrial outlook is that the British coal strike will benefit the Austrian iron trade through the stoppage of imports of British iron products. As yet conditions on the inland iron market are unsatisfactory, though prices show a slight increase.

The textile trades are more cheerful, however, especially the cotton branch. The shoe trade is dull, but leather better, manufacturers of leather goods having exhausted their stocks. The sugar trade outlook is also improved, owing to higher prices.

The eleventh "sample fair" at Vienna opened with a large foreign representation, especially from France, whence there is being sent a collective exhibit of eighty-four prominent Parisian fashion firms.

CROP ESTIMATES REDUCED.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Sept. 5.—The census of the German Agricultural Council, compiled as of Aug. 15, shows the yield per hectare of the two chief German crops, Winter rye and Winter wheat, to be materially below that of 1925. The Russian official crop index also shows deterioration during July, in which month the index figure dropped from 3.36 to 3.28.

The Economitcheskaya Zhizn estimates in all a reduction of about 4,000,000 tons. Since the index on Aug. 1 last year was 3.4, this means that the crops will be smaller than last year's. Those, however, were Russia's post-war records for magnitude. The Russian State's purchases are proceeding as unsatisfactorily as ever. In the first half of August only half of the expected quantity of grain was obtained.

LONDON, Sept. 5.—August's new capital issues in this market totaled only £1,500,000, against £26,700,000 in July; but the eight months' issues this year aggregated £160,000,000, against £142,500,000 in 1925. Last year foreign loans on the London market for the eight months totaled only £12,000,000, but this year, owing to the removal of the embargo on such issues, we have loaned £33,750,000 to foreign countries, while total overseas loans amount to £73,000,000, against £44,600,000 last year.

Fears have been expressed that we may be tempted in the revival which will probably follow the termination of the coal strike to overlend abroad, which would be an easy matter, owing to the reduction of our savings following the prolonged coal strike.

Austrian Gold Reserve 58½%.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

VIENNA, Sept. 5.—The latest statement of circulation by the Austrian National Bank shows 782,000,000 schillings in note circulation outstanding, against which there is a reserve of 532,000,000, partly foreign currencies, but including 41,000,000 gold, making the reserve percentage 58½.

MONEY MARKET RISES AGAIN AT BERLIN

MARK NO LONGER RISING

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Sept. 5.—The Berlin money market stiffened more than has been usual, at the month-end settlement, day-to-day money rising to 7 per cent. This is in part a result of the Reichsbank's abandonment of the fixed dollar exchange.

While the exchange rate was arbitrarily fixed, German commercial banks could borrow dollars freely in New York whenever the month-end pressure was heavy, and then convert them into marks, in which process they were guaranteed against loss on exchange when dollars were purchased for repayment. Since the Reichsbank's recent action in unpegging exchange, however, the banks feel considerable uncertainty on this score.

Rise of Mark Exchange Halts.

For the moment, it looks as if dollar depreciation would go no further. After reaching its lowest buying rate at 4.191 on the Berlin Boerse on Aug. 25, the dollar sold last Friday at 4.194. It has, therefore, practically recovered to the selling rate of 4.195, which was invariable during the period in which the Reichsbank adhered to a fixed exchange rate of 4.2.

The decline of the dollar was due to excessive offers of exchange to the Reichsbank. It is now certain that the Reichsbank will recall all gold deposited in the foreign central banks. That deposit was considered a temporary measure and President Schacht declared eighteen months ago that the Reichsbank's vaults were proper places for gold owned by the institution and that it would be recalled. The bank seems still unwilling to acquire foreign exchange. In the first three weeks of August its holding of legal cover exchange fell from 495,000,000 to 384,000,000 marks. Probably, however, its holding of non-recalled cover exchange, which is not shown separately in the return, increased.

Signs of Industrial Revival.

Revival is marked in nearly all German industries. During August bankruptcies were only 490, or barely one-fourth of the number reported in February. Unemployed workingmen on Aug. 15 numbered 1,604,000, or 400,000 less than in February. Contrary to precedent, the improvement in trade has not led to unrest of labor. The Ruhr miners, as a result of the coal boom, have requested a 4 per cent. increase in wages, but this has been done peacefully.

One interesting sidelight on labor conditions is that the Labor Minister reports that strikes and lockouts in 1925 numbered only 1,766, against 2,102 in 1924, and a high point of 8,800 in 1920. Last year was the first since the war in which no "political strike" occurred.

MODIFICATION IN DAWES TERMS RELIEVES BERLIN

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Sept. 5.—The modification of the reparations terms concluded with Parker Gilbert has had an excellent effect on business sentiment here, not only because it saves Germany 500,000,000 marks in the next two reparations years, but also because it is the first indication that the Allies are willing to temper the Dawes settlement whenever it imposes an unreasonable strain. The necessity of this modification resulted from an error in the German Ministry's finance policy, which has persistently shifted the centre of gravity from direct to indirect taxes, although most of the indirect taxes are already pledged for reparations.

As a result of this the liability for reparations was increased automatically whenever the yield of the pledged taxes should exceed one billion marks. This contingency came positively into sight as far back as June, when the report for the first quarter of the fiscal year showed that pledged revenues had brought in more than 461,000,000 marks. There was an increase also in the import duties sanctioned a year ago. In the first quarter customs and tobacco revenue, though only two out of the five pledged sources, yielded nearly 3,000,000,000 marks.

Politically, the incident has given the Opposition an excuse for attacking the policy of the Luther and Marx Cabinets.

STRONG MARKET AT VIENNA.

Stock Exchange Helped by Political Developments.

VIENNA, Sept. 5.—Throughout the past week the Vienna Bourse has again shown distinct firmness. In this case it was the settlement of the internal Parliamentary crisis which brought recovery from the weakness of the few preceding days. The rise of prices for German industrial shares at Berlin also had good effect in Vienna.

In view of the increased activity, the Vienna Bourse is resuming Saturday sessions. The stock market at Prague is weaker, largely owing to continuous realizing in those shares which presented good opportunity for profits. At Budapest the market has been quiet and dull.

LONDON VIEW OF ITALY'S NEW CURRENCY REFORM

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Sept. 5.—The improvement in Italian exchange from 149 to 132 to the pound sterling during the past few days is associated entirely with publication of the measures proposed by the Italian Government for improving the lira. Evidently the Government regards the internal value of the lira as considerably higher than its external value, and will probably aim at stabilization on an even better basis than the rate now ruling. It is noted with some interest, however, that the Bank of Italy is taking over the Morgan loan at a rate equivalent to about 135 lire for the pound sterling, which leads to belief in some quarters that this may be the stabilization figure desired.

Italy apparently is not yet returning to the gold standard, but first of all her Government desires to raise the value of the currency. It is believed that Italian industry must suffer at first from stabilization, after the long period of inflation which has encouraged artificial trade activity and has made adjustment to higher valued currency difficult and often painful. Italy, however, is more capable of making adjustments of this kind than many other countries which have passed through much worse periods of inflation. Generally speaking, the City is favorably impressed by the Italian Government's proposals.

EARLY RECOVERY NOT EXPECTED IN EUROPE

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

AMSTERDAM, Sept. 5.—This market's impression of the European industrial position is that no great improvement is to be expected during the balance of the year. The first condition of such improvement is the stabilization of currencies everywhere, a step which is not expected before the end of the year.

Both in England and in Germany the industrial plant is considered too large for existing needs, a difficulty which can be remedied only by time. But the removal of competition with other depreciated and fluctuating currencies is considered the first condition for recuperation in those countries.

High Protective Tariffs a Handicap.

VIENNA, Sept. 5.—As seen from here, the Autumn trade outlook of Central Europe is not particularly promising. High protective duties imposed by the States against one another, combined with continued arbitrary restriction of exports and imports, render foreign trade in this section of the world increasingly difficult.

At the same time the diminished purchasing capacity of the home population tends to make the industrial situation still more precarious.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Sept. 5.—The week closed with the first definite signs that the miners want a settlement of the dispute that has now lasted 128 days. Matters may now move rapidly, although it is recognized that the owners will insist on more coal being produced, which means a longer working day. It is possible that this may prove a stumbling block in the way of the new negotiations now about to take place, but financial markets prefer to take a cheerful view. Consequently, the stock market is showing rather more animation, with a rising tendency of prices.

The coal stoppage produced practically no adverse effects on the financial markets throughout its four months' duration. Indeed, values are now higher than in May, when the strike commenced, while an active Autumn is anticipated if a satisfactory settlement is reached. There are already signs of reawakening in financial quarters after an unusually slack August and several new capital issues are under discussion, including French municipal loans.

BERLIN, Sept. 5.—The Boerse was firm during the week, but reactions due to profit-taking prevented any general rise of prices and the average of Stock Exchange quotations remains below that of Aug. 21, when the year's high point was touched. The outside public's interest is confined to "specialities," particularly to the electro-technical stocks.

As a result of trust-formation rumors, Siemens-Halske, which began the year at 65, touched 211 early in the present week.

BERLIN, Sept. 5.—The index of wholesale German prices on Aug. 25 was 128.2, as against 126.7 on Aug. 18. The Frankfurter Zeitung's price index for manufactured goods on Aug. 30 works out at 126.9. The high level was 143.79 in April, 1925.

FRANC'S RISE SHOWS REVIVED CONFIDENCE

STRONG TREASURY POSITION

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Sept. 5.—The past week's rise in the franc caused much greater cheerfulness in the Paris market. The movement, which originated when Poincaré formed his Government, seems now to be continuing progressively, and the position last week was that offers of foreign currencies such as sterling and dollars found few bidders at the existing rates.

This attitude of the usual purchasers of foreign currencies and sellers of francs, at a time of year when import of grain and raw material for the textile industry ordinarily causes very large purchases of foreign currency as cover, is universally recognized as meaning that such importers are now discounting fresh improvement in the franc. The drawback to this situation is the uncertainty surrounding the franc's valuation. In case events were to discountenance the hopes entertained, there would necessarily result heavy and hasty purchases of sterling and dollars, resulting in an unfortunate repercussion on the rate for francs.

Nevertheless, the week ended with an atmosphere of hope. The bank return, with its increase in loans to the State and note circulation, did not greatly modify this feeling. Although the Treasury borrowed 900,000,000 francs, the figures were considered normal in view of the month-end settlement. It is, however, pointed out that the returns of the bank's branches for the final week of August have not yet been included, so that provincial payments by the Treasury do not figure in last Thursday's statement. The same reservation applies to the increased note issue of nearly 200,000,000 francs. The increase of 520,000,000 in bills discounted during the week was not particularly large; it is only half as great as in the same week last year.

Whatever the showing of next Thursday's bank return, the fact admittedly remains that the Treasury situation improved very greatly during August, when 1,400,000,000 francs was repaid against the borrowings of previous months. Although the figures of August's public revenue have not yet been published, it is believed that these large Treasury repayments to the bank were due rather to a considerable increase in subscriptions to Treasury bonds than to higher revenue receipts.

The increased taxation voted by Parliament at the instigation of Poincaré is not thought to have had time yet to affect the Treasury situation greatly, nor did repayment of direct taxes during August bring in any great resources, as was the case in July. But the conclusion is that the indicated renewal of subscriptions to Treasury bonds, which were being presented for redemption during previous months, is evidence of returning public confidence. The result is considered all the more noteworthy in that it occurs just when higher prices for commodities are causing greater requirements for circulating money on the part of the public.

WEEKLY AVERAGE OF BRITISH PRICES HIGHER

Index Number for Last Week Above Any Figure Since February.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Sept. 5.—Crump's British index number as cabled for the past week is 142.5, which compares with 141.9 one, two and three weeks ago, and 141.7 four weeks ago. This week's average is the highest since Feb. 20, when it stood at 143.2. The highest Crump average thus far in 1926 was 146.7, on Jan. 9; the lowest, 138.1, on June 19.

The average for the full month of August is 141.5. This compares with 139.3 for June, 139.3 for April, 140.3 for March, 143.3 for February and 145.5 for January. As the Crump index number had not been compiled for the first three weeks of May, no average for the full month of May has been given. The average for June, which was the same as that reached for the month of April, was the lowest for the year to date, and was also lower than any monthly average in 1925, that year's lowest monthly average having been 148 for December; its highest, 164.5 for January.

The index number of average Italian prices, compiled by the Chamber of Commerce at Milan, was 692.5 last week, comparing with 692.9 the week before, 689.9 two weeks before, 689.7 three weeks before and 680.3 five weeks before. The average of a week ago was the highest for the year to date, and was also higher than any reached in 1925; the average of 636.2 for the week ended May 1 was the lowest for 1926 to date.

July Tin Plate Exports Gain.

PITTSBURGH, Sept. 5.—July exports of tin plate were 20,197 gross tons, the month thus beginning to reflect the export buying reported for several months, due to the British coal strike almost stopping tin plate production in South Wales. The July exports were one-half greater than the monthly average in either 1924 or 1925, and heavy exports are expected to continue.

WEEK'S AVERAGE PRICES OF COMMODITIES LOWER

NEW HAVEN, Sept. 5.—Professor Irving Fisher's index number of American commodity prices for last week, based on 100 as the average of 1913, is 147.6, comparing with 148.1 the week before, 147.2 two weeks before, 147.3 three weeks before and 147.7 four weeks before. The average of two weeks ago was the lowest for the year to date, and was also lower than any reached in 1925; the highest thus far in 1926 was 159.7 on Jan. 30.

The highest weekly average reached in 1925 was 164.4 on Jan. 31, which was also higher than any reached in 1924; the lowest was 154.1, on May 2. The highest percentage since the war was 247, in May, 1920; the lowest, 130, in January, 1922.

For the full month of August the average is 147.6, which compares with 149.5 for the month of July, 152.0 for the month of June, and 152.2 for the month of May. This month's average is the lowest for the year to date, and is also lower than any monthly average in 1925. The highest for 1926 to date was 159.2 for the month of January.

STOCK AVERAGE GOES TO HIGHEST OF YEAR

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Sept. 5.—The weekly index number of Stock Exchange prices, compiled by Professor Fisher and based on the week's fifty most active industrial stocks, reckoned on their average of 1925 as 100, is 178.7 for the past week. This compares with 175.1 a week ago, 176.7 two weeks ago, 175.5 three weeks ago, and 170.9 four weeks ago. This week's average is the highest of the year to date, and is also higher than any reached in 1925. The average of 121.1 on April 17 was the lowest of 1926 to date.

The average for the full month of August is 170.7, comparing with 152.9 for the month of July, 141 for June, and 128 for May. This month's average is the highest monthly average for the year to date, and is also higher than any monthly average reached in 1925, during which year the highest monthly average was 144.5 for December; the lowest was 97.9 for April. The average of 127.2 for April was the lowest of 1926 to date.

EXCHANGE OF CHECKS SET AUGUST RECORD

Total Surpasses Any Previous August, Although There Was Slight Fall From July.

Exchange of checks at the principal clearing houses of the country during August aggrgated $39,946,960,138. While this total showed a decline of 8.7 per cent. from July, and except for February is the smallest month of the calendar year, the turnover creates a new high record for an August, exceeding by 5 per cent. the returns for the same month a year ago, which had previously held this position.

New York City clearings totaled $21,675,979,699, which was 7.2 per cent. in excess of August, 1925, but a shrinkage of 9 per cent. from July of this year. Outside of New York City drawn checks amounted to $18,270,980,440, a gain of 2.5 per cent. over August a year ago, but a loss of 8.4 per cent. compared with July, 1926.

Summarizing the Federal Reserve districts, the returns disclosed that nine of the twelve showed heavier returns this August over the same month a year ago. In the three exceptions there was a marked decline in one—Atlanta—where the total dropped more than $215,000,000, or a loss of 19.9 per cent. compared with August, 1925.

August clearings for the country as compiled by The Commercial and Financial Chronicle compare as follows with those of previous months and years:

Kansas City Interests Plan Delivery From Texas Panhandle.

A project has just been launched in the Texas Panhandle that involves one of the greatest natural gas developments ever undertaken. The plan calls for the delivery to Kansas City, Mo., and intermediate towns and cities from the Panhandle district, a distance of 500 miles, of an unlimited supply of domestic and industrial gas.

C. W. Sears of Wichita and Alfred J. Diescher of Winfield, Kan., who are credited with representing Kansas City interests, have obtained a long-term lease on 58,200 acres of land belonging to the S. B. Burnett estate, in Carson County of the Texas Panhandle. The acreage covered by the lease is proved and semi-proved for heavy gas production, and the lessee has contracted to start actual construction work on a twenty-inch gas line from the Burnett ranch to Kansas City and start drilling operations on twelve tests on the ranch within six months from the date of contract.

EUROPE BELIEVES FRANC WILL HOLD

THE "STABILIZATION PRICE"

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Sept. 5.—The view taken in this market of the franc's prospects has grown more hopeful. The feeling is, however, that formal stabilization can come only when the Bank of France, as it is expressed in the experts' report, "decides to purchase and sell gold at a fixed rate."

The fact that the French Government last week fixed the customs gold coefficient at 6 to 1 is taken here to mean that Poincaré hopes to stabilize the franc at 150 to the pound sterling, as against the present rate of nearly 162. No higher stabilization value for the franc is considered possible by this market.

AMSTERDAM, Sept. 5.—I have talked with an important Dutch banker regarding the prospect for the franc. His judgment was that maintenance of the present level is likely unless new political unrest were to develop in the next session of the French Parliament. There are reports that a new campaign in the market for francs and lira is preparing, backed by English and German financiers, the purpose this time being the enhancing of values in those exchanges.

On the other hand, there is much talk of a "production crisis" in Italy, France and Belgium, because, with enhancement of the value of the currencies, prices of commodities and wages would not decrease equally, which would necessarily work to the detriment of export by those countries. The stabilization price to be fixed for the French franc is still a matter of conjecture; in some quarters as high a valuation as 8 cents is considered possible.

Obstacles Foreseen by Paris.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Sept. 5.—The rise in French prices, which is expected to continue, is regarded as one difficulty in the way of the Treasury's finance plans. The Government will not hereafter be helped, as it was in July, by the public's action in paying taxes in advance and will therefore have to meet the requirements of public finance wholly through the increase in regulation revenue and the policy of rigorous economy.

The obtaining of foreign credits would naturally constitute a guarantee for maintenance of equilibrium in the Treasury, but little optimism is expressed in financial circles in regard to that consideration. The question is recognized as bound up with ratification of the debt agreements, an action which is still problematic. So far as can be judged from sources of information open to Paris financiers, the Chamber and Senate still remain during the Parliamentary recess opposed to ratification. Furthermore the press campaigns in the matter are apparently increasing public hostility to the debt agreements. It is considered at the moment, therefore, unlikely that the Government will decide to demand ratification peremptorily when Parliament meets again, and thereby let the Ministry's existence be placed at the hazard of debate.

BUSINESS ACTIVITY GROWS IN THE WEST

Eight Months in Dry Goods Shows Gain—Industrial and Financial Outlook Good.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Sept. 5.—Activity in leading lines of business and industry is increasing moderately, and with the turn into the Autumn months indications are for a continued good consumption with steady buying. An outstanding feature in the business structure is the continued activity in buying, shipments and consumption of steel, with the leading industry operating at around 85 per cent. in the Chicago district, and in some special lines the operating capacity is higher.

The record for the last three months has been seldom, if ever, beaten and there has been no material let up in the first few days of September. Railroad buying of rails and cars continues slack, but expectations are that it will increase later. The best index of business conditions is the railroad traffic. In August the leading Western railroads handled 1,146,568 cars of revenue freight, compared with 1,119,762 in the same time last year.

The coal industry is showing more animation, and in some lines there is an increased consumption and a hardening of prices. Stocks have not increased to any extent and yard dealers are understood to have smaller supplies than last year. In the building industry the showing is satisfactory, and in the Chicago district a feature is the activity in home structures, particularly in the suburbs, while large apartment buildings in the cities are also being planned, which suggests an oversupply.

Wholesalers of dry goods experienced good sales in August as compared with last year and the past week's business was also good and about the same as a year ago. For the eight months the record is about 5 per cent. in excess of last year.

One of the best features in the mercantile situation is the showing by the two leading mail order houses, which represents the condition of consumers in the large cities throughout the agricultural and manufacturing regions of the West, as well as the farming interests. Their combined sales in August were 32,574,053, an increase over last year of $3,825,189. For the eight months they present an aggregate of $286,105,618 and a gain of $28,772,351.

Retail business is moving along at a good rate with sales in Chicago ahead of last year although in some of the outlying districts reports are not entirely as favorable.

Although there has been a large expansion in loans indicated by the consolidated report of the Federal Reserve Bank, which is due to increased general business activity and caring for the after-harvest movement of grain, loans by the Chicago Federal Reserve declined $3,611,000 for the week ended Sept. 1 and deposits dropped $17,064,000 while the total reserves were off $6,336,000, making the ratio 74.8 per cent., compared with 74.1 per cent. the previous week.

Indications are for a maintenance of present interest rates and for an ample supply of credit for all interests.

Break in Grains the Feature—Crop Prospects Affects Market —Lard and Cotton Lower.

The feature of last week's cash markets was the irregularity which marked the course of the grains, this being due in large measure to the mixed opinion of the Canadian crop outlook. Prices were milled about from the opening to the closing session, final levels showing wheat and flour to have established new lows, while rye also sustained a sharp reaction from the preceding week. Oats remained firm. Middle West lard was somewhat affected by the movement in the grains and closed at the week's lowest on Saturday.

Firmness was the chief characteristic of the groceries and dairy products, the seasonal demand making for firm prices and slight gains over the week. Some of the recent improvement in the metals was lost, lead, zinc and tin sagging. Cotton was another to waver near the week-end. The miscellaneous group was quiet but firm.

STATE PAPER MONEY

Representative Wright Patman of Texas has introduced a bill in the House of Representatives which would prohibit the issuance of paper money by any State, municipality or corporation. The bill would also prohibit the issuance of any kind of scrip except by the Federal Government.

Mr. Patman's bill would not affect the issuance of bank notes by national banks, but would prohibit the issuance of any kind of paper money by State banks.

STEEL OUTPUT TOPS AVERAGE IN AUGUST

VIEW AHEAD PROMISING

But Forward Buying Gauge Is Missing and Estimates as to Future Are at Sea.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, Sept. 5.—Steel mills operated at a higher rate this week than their average in August and seem to be already fortified to continue the rate for several weeks. There was a decided improvement in specifying and in new buying in the latter part of August, and estimates of production in the next couple of months are running higher than three weeks ago. For August, the latest estimates are that steel ingot production was approximately at the June rate, while little surprise would be felt should the official report, due within a week, show a gain over June.

It is a new thing for the steel trade to scrutinize mill operations so closely and attach importance to small changes. The reason is that there is lacking the guide that used to be furnished in forward buying. Customers are not buying ahead. This hand-to-mouth policy leaves the future less discernible, but does not make it correspondingly insecure, for industrial activity has momentum.

Pig Iron Gains in Production.

The official midsummer pig iron statistics, just issued, show 20,016,082 gross tons of pigiiron and ferro-alloys produced in the first half of this year, representing 4.5 per cent. increase over the first half of last year. The July and August comparison is quite different, for last year there was the familiar Summer dip, practically absent this year. The Iron Age report, which excludes the inconsequential item of charcoal iron production, shows 6,419,528 tons produced in the two months, August being less than 1 per cent. under July, and this is 20 per cent. above production in the same months last year.

The gain this year over last was 870,332 tons up to July 1, but about 1,925,000 tons up to Sept. 1. On the assumption that production in the last four months of the year will be at the August rate, the calendar year total would be about 39,000,000 tons, or 6 per cent. gain over 1925. The actual divergence from this figure will hardly be as much as a million tons, even with quite a change in conditions.

Up to the present, at any rate, seasonal influences in the various steel consuming lines are not noticeably affecting the total of steel production. While there has been a little decrease lately in buying of merchant pipe and of country goods, the pipe mills have such backlogs that they are confident of maintaining their recent operation, above 90 per cent., through October, and line pipe business may take up the slack and give them nearly as high an operation through the Winter.

Some Good Bookings.

The National Tube Company has booked 300 miles of ten-inch pipe for an oil line in Colombia, South America, and several domestic lines are in sight, besides the record big line, 450 miles of 20-inch for a gas line from the Amarillo field in Texas to Kansas City.

In fabricated structural steel lettings there came two fair weeks and in the past week a fair run of business was swelled by about 30,000 tons for two bridges from New Jersey to Staten Island. In freight car buying, dormant since early in March, there is no definite improvement. While the wire trade has been relatively poor all year, business of the past two months compares favorably with that of a year earlier, there having been no stocking in the fore part of this year. Prices are very steady.

STEEL PRICES HOLD FIRM.

Rearrangement of Gauge Differentials in Sheets Suggested.

PITTSBURGH, Sept. 5.—Bars, shapes and plates remain steady in the open steel market at advances of two to three months ago, bars and shapes being 2 cents and plates at 1.90 cents. Large contract buyers expect concessions from open market prices and will presumably get contracts for fourth quarter at prices involved in present contracts.

The sheet market has been increasing in activity for three months, the recent turnover being approximately equal to productive capacity. A stimulus to the buying of light gauges has been furnished by the proposal of mills to change the base gauge from 28 to 24, rearranging the gauge differentials, whereby the lighter gauges would be higher and the heavier gauges lower than formerly, without any material change in the general average. The new system is claimed to be in harmony with production costs in the different gauges.

The Connellsville coke market reflects a firm stand on the part of sellers, due to their having a good outlet in gas coal exports, but consumers do not respond and the market remains dull.

Inquiry for foundry pig iron has been broadening and the valley market seems likely to come to life.

Heavy melting steel scrap retains its firm position, at $17.50 to $18, in face of light buying by mills.

SEEKS NEW USES FOR GAS.

American Association Appropriates $500,000 for Research.

An appropriation of $500,000 to be used exclusively for research work in an endeavor to develop new uses for gas has been made by the American Gas Association, it was announced yesterday through The Associated Press.

The major part of the money has been turned over to the Surface Combustion Company of New York, a subsidiary of Henry L. Doherty & Co., to further the pioneer work this organization is conducting.

Week's Provisions Drop 3 Cents Lb.

CHICAGO, Sept. 5.—Provisions have had a long decline and finished the week at about the lowest prices, with lard off 50 to 60 cents, ribs 65 cents and bellies 47½ to 77½ cents, and show a loss from the high point of the season of about 3 cents a pound all around, while within a week hogs have been up almost to the highest point of the season with an irregular break of nearly one cent a pound.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE RATES

Foreign exchanges generally braced for the better last week, reversing the sagging tendency of the preceding week. This cheerfulness seemed to have been inspired by the announcement of a stabilization program for the lira, for in this bill particularly sentiment crystallized on Saturday in a violent upturn to 3.83 cents, a gross gain of ⅝ cent from the week's low, and highest in more than three months.

Coincident with the publication of the Italian Premier's plan, which called for a reduction in Government loans at the Bank of Italy by 2,500,000,000 lire, and a cut in circulation of 5,000,000,000 lire, there was a sudden and unexpected sharp bidding for lire by a well-known international banking agency. This buying, popularly termed as "excellent," and representing semi-official action, soon had the lira pointing upward in most vigorous fashion.

The course of the Continentals was sentimentally influenced as a result of this development in the Italian situation, for the French franc crossed the 3-cent level again, and the Belgian bill strengthened to a point around 2⅝ to 2⅞ cents, which is also a sharp recovery from its record low touched as a result of a break-down in its stabilization plan. Sterling covered a range of ⅝ cent, its close at $4.85⅝ being highest for the week. Swiss, Holland, Scandinavian and Spanish descriptions were all firm, and some moderately up for the week. German marks remained firm throughout.

Resumption of speculation selling of the Chinese currencies put these down sharply, the decline being heightened by the break in silver here and in London. Japanese yen, on the other hand, was strong, touching a new high for cables at 48.25 cents. South Americans held steady and within a narrow groove.

SOUTH IS PUZZLED OVER COTTON CROP

DETERIORATION REPORTED

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 5.—The past week has been featured by a gradual slowing down of trading in cotton incident to the approach of another Government report. Such reports are increasingly difficult to forecast because of the fact that the Government no longer makes public in advance the so-called pars to be used in deducting the indicated yield from the condition averages reported when applied to the planted acreage. With no knowledge as to the Government pars the private authorities so-called, while differing but moderately in the condition average found, show extremely wide divergence of views in the matter of the indicated yield.

With the private authorities no longer any help in guessing what the Government is likely to show, there is increasing inclination to even up commitments in advance of the official report. All the official forecasts as to indicated yield issued so far this season have proved surprises, the earlier ones proving larger than popularly expected and the most recent one considerably smaller than anticipated.

Judging from private advices from the interior, the crop has deteriorated seriously since Aug. 16, particularly in the western belt, including Louisiana, owing to too much rain, insect activity, the rotting of plants, and boll weevils. At the same time it must not be forgotten that a record acreage has been planted this season and it is barely possible that with good weather and an open Fall a large yield may be produced despite the drawbacks to which this crop has been subjected. These considerations have given rise to the wide differences of opinion which are shown in the crop indication given out by the so-called private authorities.

The general disposition to "even up" commitments during the past week has resulted in alternate reactions and rallies. Thus at the beginning of the week prices eased off to 17.49 for December or 55 points down from the high point reached near the end of the preceding week. This drop was due to liquidation of a portion of the sizable long interest claimed to have existed in the market. By Tuesday, however, owing to less favorable weather and numerous reports of insect depredations and general crop deterioration, December rallied to 17.89, or 40 points up from the low of the preceding day, due to active covering by shorts.

The price level gradually eased off again as the week progressed, owing to comparatively favorable weather, some rather large crop estimates and to the fact that the weekly weather and crop summary of the Weather Service proved less unfavorable when issued Wednesday morning than the trade had been led to expect. As a result there was a renewal of long liquidation and there was also an appreciable amount of hedge selling encouraged by the rather more liberal purchases of spot cotton in the interior markets.

Most traders are expecting the Government to show a smaller indicated yield on Wednesday than that given out based on the condition of Aug. 16. The pivoting point appears to be about 15,100,000 bales. Should the indicated yield given out Wednesday be over that figure the market would probably decline on the liquidation of the held-over long interest, but should the Government reduce its indicated yield to 15,000,000 bales or less the market would likely rally, particularly should the weather have become again unsettled, as some map readers predict it will.

CORN CROP LIKELY SAFE.

Frost May Not Hit It—Estimates of Wheat Yield Growing.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Sept. 5.—The important factor in the corn crop is the probability of its maturing before frost comes. The average date of early frost in the corn belt States ranges from O

Wheat Is 22 Cents Below Last Year and Corn 25, but Wheat Sales Are Larger.

CHICAGO, Sept. 5.—Labor Day finds the grain markets weak with the prices around the lowest of the season and tending lower, with the volume of speculation rife, the foreign demand spasmodic and not enough buying to be an important factor in the trade. As compared with last year, wheat prices are 14 to 22 cents lower, with the near futures leading. September corn is 23 cents lower and the deferred futures ½ to 3¼ cents lower; oats, 1⅞ to 2¾ cents lower; May, showing the most strength in both of these grains, while rye is 2¼ cents higher to 2 cents lower, December being the weakest and May the strongest.

While the speculative trade complains of lack of general interest, sales of wheat futures on the Chicago Board of Trade last week were 269,623,000 bushels, compared with 188,131,000 bushels the previous week and 257,136,000 bushels last year. Total sales of all grains for the week were 416,577,000 bushels, compared with 429,721,000 bushels last year. The average open interest in all grains, taking the average for August as given out officially by the Grain Futures Administration late Saturday, was larger than in July, being 208,516,000 bushels, against 201,548,000 bushels last year.

On Down Grade All Week.

Grain prices last week were on the down grade most of the time, September getting to within a half cent of the lowest of the season, $1.29. December dropped to $1.32¼ and May to $1.38, both deliveries reaching the season's low, with losses for the week of 1⅞ to 2¾ cents, May being the strongest and September the weakest.

Corn dropped to 74¼ cents for September or within ¼ cent of the season's low, while May also set a new low mark, declining 87¼ cents, yet closing 1 cent higher for the week, while other deliveries were off ¼ to 1¼ cents. September finished at 74⅝, December at 82⅛ to 83 and May 88⅝.

All futures of oats dropped to a new low level for the season, with a small rally and a close for September of 36¼, December 40⅝ to 40⅞ and May 45⅝. September was ¼ cent lower for the week and the other futures ½ to 1 cent higher. September rye closed the week at 92½ cents or 5¾ cents under December, while May finished close to the bottom, at $1.03, with losses for the week of 2¾ to 3¾ cents.

In the wheat market stocks are increasing at a more moderate rate, Winter wheat marketing keeping up fairly, and more Spring wheat is being used in the American and Canadian Northwest. Reports from the latter section indicate that farmers sold on an average of about 1,000,000 bushels a day during last week, largely in Saskachewan and Manitoba. The Canadian pool is a factor in the Winnipeg market, and probably does some hedging in Chicago, as well as in Winnipeg, and Canadian No. 3 Northern wheat is being sold at lower prices than American Winters, having taken a good part of the foreign demand away from the latter.

At the close Winnipeg futures show losses of ⅝ to 1 cent. The Northwest sold May wheat freely in Chicago on hard spots throughout the week, and the close on Minneapolis was at losses of 3 cents.

Wet Wheat for Millers to Dry.

Cash wheat is selling on a delivery basis for the contract grades, with sample grade wet wheat ranging from 80 cents to $1.16, or at discounts of 14 to 50 cents a bushel. This wheat can be dried out and will make good milling grain. There are indications of the milling trade having in some instances overbought.

The corn market is a weather proposition with the trade more divided. There are those who believe that the crop will be damaged by an early frost and specialists assert with a great deal of positiveness that wheat will come out all right, weather permitting. The cash corn situation is slightly better, and the position in which the corn trade finds itself as a result of carrying unusually large stocks of winter-shelled corn through the Summer and into the Fall months, is likely to bring a change in trade regulations before another season.

The oat and rye situation presents nothing of particular interest outside of changing operations, with elevator people securing good carrying charges not only on these grains but in corn which ordinarily is against the bull market.

DECRIES OLD THEORIES ON POLICY TO TRUSTS

Industrial Conference Board Says Public Must Be Ruled by Facts of Today.

The National Industrial Conference Board, which is conducting an inquiry into the trend toward consolidation in American business, issued a statement yesterday declaring that the public policy toward mergers could no longer be based on theories generally held when the merger movement started. The statement said:

"A sound evaluation of public policy in regulating industrial integration and competitive practices, in the view of the board, is possible only upon a comprehensive basis of scientifically collected present-day facts regarding the actual experience with mergers and their effect upon our economic life, such as is attempted in the investigation now nearing completion by the research staff of the board."

The investigation is being conducted into the whole problem of the merger movement. The board, in its study, says it has approached the question from a purely pragmatic standpoint, scientifically compiling data regarding the experience of industries operating under a régime of consolidation and of those operating more or less free from the influence of consolidated control.

CATTLE PRICES HOLD RECENT ADVANCES

Hogs Higher Than Week Before, but Lower Than Year Ago—Lamb Market Sags.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Sept. 5.—In hogs there was a narrowing of the spread between the bottom and the top prices and the close was around 40 cents loss from the high point of the week, at a net loss of 10 cents on the range, while the average was 15 cents higher than the previous week, at $11.65, and 35 cents lower than last year. Fewer heavy packing hogs are being marketed and more lightweights, with Spring pigs, weighing 100 to 135 pounds, showing up in larger numbers. Receipts for the week of 109,000 compared with 111,913 the previous week and 112,000 last year.

Cattle prices maintained their recent advance on choice yearlings and heifers, which sold at $11, and heavy beef steers advanced 50 cents, selling at $10.90, while butcher stock was 15 to 25 cents lower and feeders 25 to 40 cents lower. The beef demand was better, despite receipts of 70,300 at Chicago, the best since January and an increase of almost 10,000 for the week and of 8,000 over last year. Western range cattle are coming in more freely, with 10,700 received, against 23,000 last year. The average of beef steers for the week was $10, the highest of the year, up 35 cents for the week.

Fat lambs broke 50 to 75 cents, while feeding lambs advanced 15 to 25 cents to the top of the season, $14.90 against $15.25 for fat killing lambs. Range lambs are coming mostly from Washington and Montana, and increased offerings are expected. The average on lambs for the week is $14.25, a drop of 40 cents from the previous week and 75 cents under last year. Sheep averaged $5.65, with the offerings light, gaining 10 cents for the week, compared with $7.10 last year.

Sheep receipts, 103,000, were the largest since last July, increasing 8,000 over the previous week and decreasing 14,000 from last year.

Fifty Nations In Road Congress.

MILAN, Italy, Sept. 5 (AP).—An international exposition has opened here as a prelude to the inauguration tomorrow of the fifth international road congress. Eleven nations have exhibits, while delegates from fifty countries will attend the congress. The United States is represented by Thomas H. MacDonald, Chief of the Bureau of Roads; Herbert H. Rice, Vice President General Motors Corporation; George M. Graham, Vice President Chandler Motors Company; Paul D. Sargent, State Highway Commissioner of Maine; Fyke Johnson of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce; H. C. McLean and H. H. Kelly of the United States Department of Commerce stationed at Rome and Paris, respectively.

SPINDLETOP FIELD STAGES A COMEBACK

600,000 BARRELS IN JULY

Yielded 17,420,949 In 1902, Then Fell Off—August Figures Piling Up to Impressive Total.

Spindletop, the world's wonder oil field that revolutionized an infant industry in 1901 with the most sensational oil production known even to this day, is undergoing a come-back that does a great deal to refute the theory that the future oil supply can be reasonably reckoned by past field performances, says Wallace Davis in The Oil Weekly.

Spindletop turned out 3,593,113 barrels of heavy crude in 1901, the year it was brought in, which could be accounted for. Hundreds of thousands of barrels were wasted, because the field came unannounced. The following year it produced 17,420,949 barrels as a high mark and then settled down to a dwindling yield, finally passing into history.

But the sage who first observed that "history repeats itself" might have well used Spindletop as an example. During July of this year the field had a pipe line run of more than 600,000 barrels, and at the rate held through the early weeks of August the figures for the month promised to pile up to more than 2,100,000 barrels—in other words, a production rate which, if held, would put the field in the next twelve months above any previous annual record, even its peak year of 1902.

Though other fields over the country are running higher daily averages than that of Spindletop, none is showing an equal productive acreage, as the field's present flush is coming from twenty acres of proved territory.

"A few faithful oldtimers predicted Spindletop would come back, and stuck to it, holding themselves up as targets for criticism," the Trade Journal says, "Company after company blocked leases around the little hill, as the productive centre continued to decline, in efforts to open offside pay. They failed one after the other, lost big money, and Spindletop, lay unnoticed except for the authors that came to brand it as a 'has been' and mourn its passing to the public ear.

"Frank Yount, President of the Yount-Lee Oil Company of Beaumont and holder of a controlling interest in the company, was among the few of the remaining old guard who refused to believe Spindletop had 'petered out.' He could visualize a second glory for the little salt dome mound that had gained world recognition, and from time to time, blocked acreage around the edges of the hill. He watched the big companies come, explore, fail and go, and then in the Fall of 1925, after bringing under control approximately 5,000 acres, he threw his hat in the ring and made locations for the Gladys City No. 1 and McFaddin No. 1, on different sides of the dome. Both were dry. He made location for the No. 2 wells on both tracts, and added two more dry holes to his credit. But four failures did not discourage the man who vowed Spindletop was not through, and the No. 3 wells followed.

FUTURE A SPHINX TO UPSTART BUILDERS

CERTIFIED JOBBING DUE

Building seems to have a hazy aspect because builders seem to be hazy about what the new era of building is going to demand of them, according to Allen E. Beals in the current Dow Service Daily Building Reports.

After his long experience as a bonus payer, out of which incubated higher wages, the prospective building projector hardly can be blamed for expecting a larger proportion of his investment dollar to line his building rather than the pockets of the artisan or the contractor.

If there is any doubt as to how fast building construction in the forthcoming Autumn, Winter and Spring will develop demand for labor and materials, it may as well be realized by the trade now as any other time that it all depends upon how much is going to be given to each individual job by each individual contractor, who, whether the union likes it or not, is going to be forced to deliver good work and plenty of it, for no other reason than that if he does not see to it that the owner gets more service and efficiency the owner will be out of the market and both the contractor and the workman will be out of jobs.

Curfew even now is being rung on the modern contractor of the type that takes a job at a low bid, expecting to make up his loss and win a profit by the simple expedient of "gypping" the job, as dishonesty in building construction parlance is flippantly called.

The slacker contractor who came into the building business during the post-war periods when service became an almost meaningless word, whenever and wherever it was possible to run away from it, is beginning to encounter a strange new thing in competition.

Being unaccustomed to the part it formerly played in figuring cost, the slacker contractor adds an arbitrary figure to his estimate to cover service, at the same time making a mental reservation that what service he can avoid rendering nets so much to him if he gets the job.

The comparatively few firms in the building business today who guarantee their work to builder or owner on a parity with the broad-gauge merchant's "money-back-if-not-satisfied" policy stand as an indictment of the industry of the whole. Some years ago it was "standard practice" to live up to the specification phrase that promised a job done in a "neat and workmanlike manner" to the complete satisfaction of the owner. The phrase is invariably there now, but the performance is almost invariably absent.

There is an increasing share of the building industry that realizes a change is taking place. There is a growing belief that the slump in building projection is the outward manifestation of investing owners that the buildings they get are not what they pay for.

"How are you going to cure it?" awakening builders ask.

The power of association is curing it. So far it has taken various forms, but the trade association conducted along the lines laid down by the Department of Commerce in its recent ruling gives ample power to put any and all trades back upon a sound business basis, where honesty is the common basis of doing business and service is rendered the contractor's customer to the same extent that it is rendered when one buys an automobile, a ham, milk, radio or an overcoat from a reputable merchant.

Great as the power of these associations is, it can be intensely magnified by the establishment of a building board of trade, comprising duly elected representatives of these existing associations empowered to sit as a court of specification appeal and adjustment between owners and building contractors wherever disputes arise as to whether construction work has been carried out in a "neat and workmanlike manner" to the "reasonable" satisfaction of the owner, or, on the other hand, to adjust losses that the contractor may unexpectedly meet.

The Heating and Piping Contractors' National Association has already started in this general direction, according to Joseph C. Fitts, assistant to the National Secretary, with offices at 50 Union Square, New York.

Certified construction is due. It may be that building investors are waiting for it now. If not now, eventually they will demand it when they begin to carry some of the maintenance cost that will be heaped upon them by reason of "gypped" construction work during the recent fat building years. When lean rental times come and maintenance costs increase, the demand for certified building construction will be loud enough to be plainly heard. It can be heard now by those who are willing to hear it.

The Heating and Piping National Contractors' Association, for example, is introducing a plan whereby a local association of contractors specializing in that part of building construction work will guarantee to the owner or his accredited representative that the job, when completed, will be in strict accordance with the specifications and that if it isn't, it will be made right. In other words, the owner-builder will get exactly the amount of heat radiation he pays for. Behind the local association stands the national association to see that the pre-construction promise is fulfilled.

This is a symptom. It shows that the old-time idea of a trade association as a place to pay dues into once a year, meet in convention, ratify a thumb-worn code of ethics and adjourn to see the sights of the convention city is passing. The up and doing trade association is the one that stands sponsor without fear or favor for the good work and integrity of its members.

It is the way to put the building business back into public confidence and normal prosperity.

Japan's Pig Iron Combination.

The Anshan Steel Works, the Penchihu Colliery Company, the Kamaishi Mining Company, the Kenjiho Works of the Mitsubishi Company and the Wanishi Mining Company of Japan recently formed the Pig Iron Joint Sales Guild for the purpose of fixing prices by mutual agreement in an effort to prevent further recessions in market prices. The amount of pig iron to be offered by the various members will be about 200,000 tons during the last half of 1926. The guild will not act as a selling agent. Sales will be handled by the owner companies.

Taiwan's Coral Yield.

Taiwan's coral industry is a remarkable new development. Coral was discovered in the Sea of Keelung in June, 1924, and within six months Taiwan was recognized as among the foremost coral producing centres. The yield in the last six months of 1924 amounted to 810,000 yen ($332,100), and the coral collected during 1925 totaled 20,683 pounds, and was valued at more than 1,000,000 yen. (The average value of the yen in 1925 was $0.41.)

Conditions in Australia.

Australian business conditions during August showed little change from the preceding month. Winter clearance sales continue, and merchants are now looking forward to Spring business. Wheat remains inactive, awaiting developments. The wool season has commenced, with larger receipts at Sydney than for the corresponding period of last year, indicating an early season.

DELIVERIES OF GARMENTS.

Caution in accepting orders that call for earlier delivery than is conveniently possible has been enjoined upon members of the United Women's Wear League of America. This advice is given, according to Executive Chairman M. Mosessohn, because current business is so good that the temptation is great to accept more orders than can be taken care of within the time limits they set. Mr. Mosessohn said yesterday that the matter of deliveries offers retailers ample excuse for the return of merchandises, which must later be sold at a sacrifice in the form of "jobs."

"It would be too much to say that buyers deliberately press for early deliveries in the expectation of returning merchandise that is not shipped in time with the idea of rebuying it later at reduced prices," he continued, "but that is frequently the way the practice works out. If the retailer needs the merchandise the chances are that he will not attempt to cancel any part of the order, even if it is delayed. But if, on the other hand, a 'spell' of unseasonable weather should interfere with business, the retailer would be strongly tempted to return garments that were not delivered strictly in accordance with the contract. Among some of the unscrupulous retailers it might be suswill not attempt to cancel any part of the original plan.

"This season the garment manufacturer cannot go into the piece goods market and get immediate deliveries as he could in previous seasons, when the hand-to-mouth buying policy had not yet affected the fabric houses. It is this practice, inaugurated by the retailer, which makes early deliveries and volume production difficult, especially the sudden spurts of production that are forced upon the manufacturer at such times as the present.

"Because textile deliveries are so uncertain the garment manufacturer should be sure to give himself plenty of time for filling his orders. It is much better for him to turn down business that requires deliveries earlier than he is perfectly sure he can make, than to run the risk of returns and the resultant accumulations of stock on his racks."

SCHUYLER HILL

With its feet bathed by the waters of Long Island Sound. The extremest end of Throgs Neck, Bronx, on the left hand side of Fort Schuyler Road, immediately adjoining Fort Schuyler.

Lots 30 feet wide, delightfully situated for a summer bungalow or for an all-year residence.

Come see the wonderful views across to Long Island, to Pelham Park and to City Island and as far as the eye will reach down the Sound. See how we are smoothing off the lots, placing the streets, sewers and sidewalks and putting in order a dandy little bathing beach intended just for the use of Schuyler Hill people.

Besides, we have left four very long boat house lots suitable for beaching house boats, for building a bungalow with your own beach or for business purposes.

If you do not wish to motor out to Throgs Neck and Schuyler Hill, by all means go there by the convenient subway.

Take the Lexington Ave. Subway to Pelham Park and then the Fort Schuyler bus.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 5.—A disturbance of moderate but increasing intensity is central over Southern Lake Michigan and is moving northeastward with a trough of low pressure extending southwestward to Mexico. Another disturbance is advancing eastward over the Canadian Northwest with centres over Northern Manitoba and still another is developing over the Plateau Region. Pressure is still high but falling slowly over the Atlantic States and the Canadian Maritime Provinces and it is relatively high and rising over the Southern Plain States and Alberta.

The Lake Michigan disturbance will move east northeastward to the lower St. Lawrence Valley and it will be attended by showers Monday in the Atlantic and East Gulf States, the Appalachian region, the Ohio Valley and in portions of the lower lake region. Mostly fair weather will prevail east of the Mississippi River on Tuesday, except that local thunder showers are probable in the extreme south. The temperature will be somewhat lower Monday in the Middle Atlantic and North Atlantic States and slightly lower Monday or Monday night in the Ohio Valley, Tennessee and the lower lake region.

HALL WITNESS SAYS HE HEARD 5 SHOTS

Sound Came From Phillips Farm at 10:15 P. M.—Another Not Certain as to the Hour.

STEVENS MAID QUESTIONED

Brother of Rector's Widow Is Sure His Alibi Will Stand—Three Visitors at Jail.

An air of tenseness settled yesterday over Lavallette, the little fishing village on the North Jersey coast where Henry Stevens is awaiting exoneration or arrest in the Hall-Mills case. A report that another arrest in the revived investigation was a matter of hours produced the watchful waiting atmosphere.

Mr. Stevens himself, whose passion for fishing does not extend to fishing on Sunday, failed to share the general expectancy. The same cheerful confidence he has held since Assistant Attorney General Alexander Simpson and his staff began investigating his alibi was exhibited yesterday.

He has maintained steadfastly that he knows nothing about the identity of the person or persons who discovered the tryst of the Rev. Dr. Edward W. Hall and Mrs. Eleanor R. Mills, four years ago, and shot them to death. His alibi, supported by six persons, has been "cracked," according to Senator Simpson, but Mr. Stevens has gone with unconcern about his chief business in life, the hooking of whatever kind of fish happens to be "running" off Lavallette.

Deputies on Guard at His Home.

Two Deputy Sheriffs maintained their vigil in front of his house again yesterday. The vacation plans of all the deputies of Sheriff John A. G. Grant of Ocean County have been canceled and the plan is to have deputies posted continuously in front of the Stevens home.

Two deputies have been on the watch for four days. They indicated yesterday that they were beginning to weary of their job.

"It's a darned shame," said one yesterday, as he scanned the murky skies and failed to find warmth in the car he and his companion were occupying, "it's a darned shame to spend the State's money trying to put this man in jail."

Mr. Stevens also had a comment on the efforts to put him in jail. He was reported to have uttered it as he sat down to a substantial luncheon.

"If I am put in jail," he was reported as saying, "the State certainly will have to pay for my meals—I won't send out for them."

Henry de la Bruyere Carpender, his cousin, and "Willie" Stevens, his brother, are prisoners in the Somerville (N. J.) jail. They, with Mrs. Frances Stevens Hall, widow of the slain rector, are charged with the double murder. Carpender and Stevens have had all of their meals sent to the jail from the Somerset House, Somerville, with chicken the dish most often ordered.

A Quiet Day in Lavalette.

Beyond the two deputy sheriffs on their lonesome post, no investigators were observed in or about Lavalette yesterday, and had any detectives been in town they would certainly have been seen, for the nine reporters "covering" Henry Stevens have only to group themselves to form the season's largest crowd in the town.

Senator Simpson was reported resting at Lakewood. Inspector John J. Underwood was at his Summer home in Keyport, N. J. The other detectives also were reported as resting. Inspector Underwood's examination of three witnesses at Somerville on Saturday was disclosed yesterday.

The first witness was Robert D. Cuddy of 281 Hamilton Street, New Brunswick. He joined the small army of persons who heard or saw something near or on the Phillips farm on the night the rector and his choir singer were murdered beneath a crabapple tree. Ten witnesses have testified to hearing screams or shots. Up until Cuddy was examined the witnesses had been unanimous on one phase of the shots evidence—they all had heard four shots. Some testified to having heard one shot followed by three more. Notably in this class was Mrs. Jane Gibson, star witness of the State. Others heard three shots and then one shot.

Cuddy, however, heard five shots. He told Inspector Underwood that he could not place the time of the shots, but thought it was "some time after dusk." He judged from the clarity of the shots and the direction from which they seemed to come that the pistol had been discharged back of St. Mary's Home. The institution is on the edge of De Russey's Gully, which is about twenty-five feet from De Russey's Lane where the crabapple tree stood.

The witness said that the shots had been fired in this order: One shot and then a second's interval, followed by four reports in quick succession.

Another Heard Shots at 10:15.

The next witness examined was James E. Boyle of 250 Easton Avenue, New Brunswick. Inspector Underwood did not disclose how the witnesses came within earshot of the shots, but their homes are close to the scene of the crime. Boyle also swore to having heard five shots, but he said that the order of firing was four shots followed by one.

Boyle said the shots had been fired at 10:15 P. M. on Sept. 14, 1922.

"I know that this was the exact time," he said, "because I was watching the clock in order to be off from my house in time to report for work at midnight. I remarked to my wife, when I heard the shots that it probably was some Italian firing a pistol for fun. The shots came from the direction of the Phillips farm. Near the farm was an Italian settlement and we often used to hear the residents there firing revolvers for sport."

The third witness was Miss Frances Toonan of West Union Avenue, Bound Brook. She was a cook in the employ of Henry Stevens from 1917 to 1919. Inspector Underwood said that her story was immaterial to the investigation.

Three Visitors at Jail.

Carpender and Stevens passed a quiet day in the jail at Somerville They had three visitors. Mrs. Henry Carpender remained with her husband all day. Russell Watson, New Brunswick attorney for Mrs. Hall, was a visitor for thirty minutes. The third caller was the Rev. Samuel G. Wells, an Episcopal clergyman of Trenton. Carpender was reported to have been reading the newspapers during the morning, while "Willie" Stevens read the Bible. According to a visitor who called on Carpender on Saturday, he regards the charge against him as "preposterous," and is confident that the Somerset County Grand Jury will be deaf to Senator Simpson's plea for a murder indictment.

Supreme Court Justice Charles W. Parker, who is to preside at the drawing of the September Grand Jury, is expected to return from his vacation in Maine on Wednesday. The Grand Jury drawing from a list of 125 names prepared by Sheriff Sanford W. Tunison is scheduled for Friday morning. The sessions of the Grand Jury are to begin on Sept. 21.

Among the witnesses to be questioned at Somerville tomorrow will be Dr. Laurence Runyon of New Brunswick, N. J. Dr. Runyon was the attending physician when Henry Carpender was a patient in the Middlesex County Hospital at New Brunswick in November, 1922. There have been reports that Carpender's illness had not been appendicitis. Dr. Runyon was asked about the report last night at his Summer home in Spring Lake, N. J.

"Any such statement is positively untrue," he said. "Henry Carpender did have an attack of appendicitis. I performed an operation on him myself at the Middlesex General Hospital in New Brunswick, and I shall be very glad to answer any questions that Senator Simpson or any one else wishes to ask me about this phase of the case."

Prosecutor John E. Toolan of Middlesex County refused last night to confirm or deny a report that County Detective Ferd A. David, whose official conduct in the Hall-Mills case has been under fire, would return to take up his duties tomorrow.

"David will not remain away from work because of any connection he may or may not have with the Hall-Mills case," said Prosecutor Toolan. "He is taking a vacation. I know where he is and when I want him he will return."

CHARGE KLAN GUARDS IMPERSONATE POLICE

Reports of Springfield (Mass.) Reserves in False Role to Be Investigated.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Sept. 5 (AP).—An investigation is to be started tomorrow morning by State authorities into reports brought to their attention that alleged members of the Springfiel. Military Police Reserves have been repreesnti g themselves to be State Police to persons seeking entrance to Bailey Farm in Agawam, where several thousand Ku Klux Klansmen are holding a four-day conclave.

According to guards posted at the outskirts of the farm, 6,000 Klansmen attended today's session of the conclave despite the rain. Twice that number are to attend the Labor Day gathering, they told newspapermen.

Men in the type of uniform worn by the Reserves are guarding the activities of the Klansmen, which are kept strictly secret. Some of these guards have told visitors that they are members of the State Police.

When these reports were brought to the attention of the Boston office by telephone, Lieutenant H. A. Platt said such reports had been received on other occasions and that they would be looked into thoroughly tomorrow, since the State Police had made it a rule to remain away from such gatherings unless called because of trouble.

Roads leading into the farm were heavily traveled today and yesterday by cars bearing license plates of many States near by.

LUTHERANS HOLD SYNOD.

PATERSON, N. J., Sept. 5.—The seventh annual synodical convention of the Walther League, an international organization of Lutheran young people's societies, opened this afternoon at St. Paul's Lutheran Church with about 300 delegates present from many parts of New Jersey. The Rev. A. G. Dick, pastor of St. Paul's, delivered an address of welcome. In the afternoon, officers were nominated and the reports of the President and committees were read.

The Rev. D. M. Kleist of Bogota was renominated for President and Miss Clara Lindemann of Bogota and William Will of Teaneck were renominated respectively for Secretary and Treasurer. They will be elected to succeed themselves at tomorrow's session. President Kleist's annual report dealt largely with separation of Church and State. The Lutheran Church is the only denomination that follows strictly such a policy, confining itself solely to religious activities and remaining free of politics, he said. Herman Kleindienst, Chairman of the Hospice Committee, reported that plans for the erection of a home for travelers in Northern New Jersey were progressing.

An inspirational service was held this evening. The Rev. Frederick H. Lindemann of Astoria, L. I., preached.

LINKS VALENTINO AND ELIOT

Rev. H. E. Clute Says That Both Were "Artists of Life."

Special to The New York Times.

WAPPINGER'S FALLS, N. Y., Sept. 5.—"The Contrast in Two of Our Country's Recent Funerals" was the title of the sermon at the Zion Episcopal Church here today by the Rev. Horace E. Clute. He referred to the rites for Rudolph Valentino and Dr. Eliot. Speaking of the Valentino demonstrations, the preacher said:

"Many demonstrations of emotion at his bier passed the bounds of reverence and sincerity.

"If you care what millions of your fellow-men are doing and thinking and feeling, even if you do not share entirely in those deeds, thoughts and feelings, you will regard the significance, if any, of such a widespread interest.

"Both these men mentioned have a place in our strange modern American life. History had already claimed the revered President of Harvard before he died.

"Both were artists of life, in their sphere; though President Eliot was, of course, much more than an artist.

"The tragedy we feel, often is that artists are, through modern inventions, pushed forward to become millionaires and idols, without the background and spiritual education adequately to use their great talents, or the stamina to continue it. We, the public, sin against them and end their lives before their time."

FAILS IN CATALINA SWIM.

SAN PEDRO, Cal., Sept. 5 (AP).—John Radowich, sailmaker's mate on the U. S. S. Maryland, failed today in his attempt to swim the 20-mile channel between here and Santa Catalina Island, after battling through six miles of water in 2 hours and 30 minutes.

Adverse currents sapped his strength and the swimmer lost full use of one arm and leg because of cramps. The temperature of the water was about 55 degrees.

Radowich said he would make another attempt to swim the passage, probably next month.
